That it is an interesting alt-history "England" full of Ango-Danes, furthermore that it is a kingdom with a strong reliance on its system of Knighthood.

Their nation has a bicameral assembly, composed of a senate and house of high magistrates. Two of their major parties are essentially "anarcho"-capitalist, while interestingly they still have many leftist parties if not that much leftist representation.

"No matter what, I won't forget those days we spent together."

"No matter what, I won't ever leave your side."

Time never stops flowing and seasons change, those innocent days of the past might never return.

Two sisters, eternally bound by blood and friendship, had one another in rainy skies and shining sun.

For they know deep in their hearts that no matter what, spring always comes and flowers will bloom.

It appears as if the AN is a collection of stories about Sayuri and Sakura. If I understood correctly, they appear to have a connection to the nations of Sanghyeok and Shin-Mutsu. The setting also appears to contain mythical elements, as well as magic, and takes place in Japan, or an Alternate Universe version of Japan.

The nation describes itself as "[enduring into] postmodernity, a lone beacon of revolution in a sea of capital." That's actually pretty badass.

The people of Johto are relatively religious, with 61% of them following the nation's major religion. Nonetheless, that religion happens to be a polytheistic faith whose gods typically have a long range of 'spheres of influence' under their control that poetically related to each other (goddess of time and fate, goddess of seasons and war, etc.)

So wait... their version of World War 1 was fought between the sides that were roughly England-France-Russia vs Germany-Ottoman-Italy... but the second war was damn near everybody against France and Russia?

Pancerfare, known by various names across the world, was first practiced in 1927 by the Belgians, and since then, it has grown to become a sort of international sport amongst the world of Danelaw, and that it was previously formed by draftees before many European nations dropped that idea and instead switched to willing and skilled volunteers, with monetary compensation as a reward. Oh, and Japan's Pancerfare, or Shensa-do, is practiced amongst high schoolers as well.

Aito Reiko, whose name is written entirely in katakana for some reason, was born in Hokkaido (I'm guessing Sapporo) in 1948, the third year of Allied occupation of Japan. She apparently also has a friendship with Kaga, which makes me wonder if she also gets along well with Akagi or only Kaga.

I learned that Lady Sophia can be a bit quick to judge, and she's especially quick to be critical of extravagance, despite being upper class as a noble. However, she's also quick to revise her opinions of people, especially in light of mutual vulnerability. On that note, Sophia also has the humility to laugh at herself, and she appreciates that trait in others as well. Finally, for all that Sophia is modest and humble about herself, she is interestingly quick to stick up for her homeland's culinary tradition. A bold stand, given her homeland is England! ;P

(I tease; Baizou borrows from the Isles' confectionery traditions for a reason.)

The reason I never saw Season 2, Episode 4 of the hit series Shield is because its airing time was moved from the regular time due to its contents. Should

Their version of Senshido is overseen by an international body and has several main types of play across various levels and team sizes. However, it doesn't appear they have flag-tank mode, and instead most of their matches are either annihilations or most tanks remaining. Furthermore, unlike the version from the anime, tanks built after World War II are also allowed though only in certain matches.

(I have yet to work on the Flag match, but it does exist, though somewhat different to what we saw in the show.) /skip

That the Russian Empire managed to survive intact to the present day in their world. After it successfully avoided civil war and becoming a constitutional monarchy, it even went on to become the world's largest economy and most powerful country.

Well I suppose the not only cultural but political difference that has developed between Mars and Earth in such a short time. So many traditions and standards have just been kinda done away with, and it's rather interesting!
