Relations deteriorated between the Bund and Soviet Union ever since Stalin died. Khrushchev accused them of being "revisionists" (how ironic) while the Bund pulled the Hungary card to discredit them.

First off, holy shit that history, +1

So there a Jewish state established after WW2 as a Jewish homeland in former Nazi Germany state of Saxony. My first thought is that the Germans are not going to like that, and i'd be right they had a quite extensive troubled history with the eastern half in the 70's though i think that might have just been a USSR proxy war.

Ninja'd

Tito got the moon fever and burned the treasury landing a man on the moon after it was already done and everyone stopped caring. No but really Yugoslavia had a program to rival the major powers. Also they stole the name Interkosmos and weren't even a part of the real one so that's a bit odd

History went a bit different in our world. Just to summarize: Yugoslavia never split off from the "Warsaw" Pact in 1948 because Stalin never got to power and they are the one who founded Interkosmos that would later encompass the rest of Eastern Europe. Yes, Tito used Western loans in funding his project.

Hmm, poor reading of my factbooks. We were annexed into Russia, but wars and stuff changed that.

It is a powerful Southeast Asian thalassocratic empire that nearly spans the entire Malay Archipelago and has existed for centuries uninterrupted by foreign dominance. It has one of the most powerful economies in the world, with a powerful, well-organized military to match. It has the trappings of a democratic political system, but the deeply-respected monarchy wields a great deal of influence over national politics. Last, but not least, it is staunchly anti-communist.

Well? Even as a lover of everything about roses, I still never fathomed the idea of deep-fried red roses. Then again, it is mentioned that food supplies have been on-and-off in Patagonia so of course they would try to make anything edible look "artistic" to enhance their eating experience and distract them from how their food might actually taste.

Also, yes... pasta is boring, smh.

Ravensburg was granted independence in form of a Free City after the first World War. Curious. Its population is neither that Anti-unification nor is its location in a place where independence would actually be feasible. Neither is it rich enough for secession to work.

Somehow they're an another take on an MT German nation, with the North
German Confederation somehow coalescing into a modern-day prosperous

They also retain the old Germanness stuff like the Reichstag, and have a

They also sent in hundreds and thousands of soldiers to Philippines, Sudan and
