you'll have to forgive me, a gay woman, for not giving a single shit about a user who literally said that humanity needs to abolish the gay and get rid of the 'gay gene' (which isn't a fucking thing) and that we serve no purpose to society since we can't 'pass our genes on'

Back to clichés, I think?

Nothing wrong with this -- I have participated in this on the forum, and one of my OTP is a result of this. But how plausible would the actual relationship between leaders of different states be? It will never be interpreted as not political, and it will be a long-distance relationship. And what will they do if their respective nations are at odds with each other or if they disagree strongly with each other in issues that are fundamentally not a result of their personal lives, but rather national duties?

Realism makes everything sad. Thanks for coming to my TED talk.

Not sure if this applies to P2TM too but nowadays on II you seem to have to close/invite-only most character RPs because obvious homyposters hijack the entire thing and turn it into their personal sex fantasies

I'm not saying players haven't tried to do this (maybe they have) but I wonder how many people don't understand that you can ban players from threads? Even pre-emptively. Wonder if that'd be a better solution to homyposters vs having all character-based RPs being closed/invite-only?

I've found that writing 2000 words in a post keeps away the majority of low-effort homyposters. Mind you, we have had a good many high-effort homyposters on the site in the past, but there numbers have declined as Moderation and time have eroded them. It's rather like the elves in Tolkien's work diminishing and going into the West except it's lustful nerds diminishing and getting an office job and isn't at all sad. Better uses of time and all that.

It's usually the best practice. You don't have to RP with people who make you uncomfortable or who consistently break the rules.

All this homyposting and bad RPing talk makes me miss Crazybloxian Empire a little bit. I mean they're still here but they haven't been on the forums since 2018 (just checked their profile), but they were hilariously poor at RP.

I'm talking 'would threaten to nuke/invoke you if you didn't want to play with them' levels of poor.

Like, on Gandoor, they seriously declared that they were launching nukes at my capital because I fucking rejected them from one of my storefronts.

This ends up being a vicious cycle though. The low effort posters (which aren't all homyposters) don't get exposed to higher quality RP and have no desire to improve because everyone they can interact with is also a low effort poster. Also leaves people who can't be bothered to go through the song and dance of joining an NS RP group out (or aren't even really sure how to find these groups), when there are some of us out there who are not low effort homyposters and/or number spammers.
