The guiding ideology of the country is against capitalism, fascism, monarchies, and the bourgeoisie, but is also against democracy and liberalism, and has been criticized as being oppressive while pretending to be about equality.

I like this alternate reality where the Whites win. Even though they do get communised, it's a good change of pace from your typical Soviet replica state.

The capital and fifth-largest city (almost 6 million people) is Fort Zapata in former Mexico, founded in 2027. Landmarks include the Congress of Soviets, plazas and statues dedicated to the communist revolution, a cemetery honoring those who died in battle, and a baseball stadium with a capacity of over 60,000 people. Michael Kaura was the urban planner, who traveled around the world for inspiration. Originally wanting modernist architecture, he changed his mind and wanted Gothic, Hispanic, and Art Deco instead. Stuffed frybread is the signature food of the city. Fort Zapata is a sister city with Tokyo, Japan and many others.

A nation of 30 million people in an area about the size of Myanmar or slightly larger than France. It is a monarchy that uses the bitcoin as their main currency.

The kings all have mathematical-sounding names, pixel-art portraits, and apparently have lifespans of a few years, implying that either time is measured differently or this all takes place in some computer-simulated world. Considering that the regular months are still used, probably the latter.
