But unfortunately, people like to flock to either BurgSyn (Nazism² but run by the SS), Omsk ("ALL GERMANS MUST DIE, AHIGAGIOANW"), or "Funni Clockman" (an insane man in the middle of Russia)

Isn't clockman Taboritsky?

Oh ok, so it appears I'm a nazbol now.

Broadly I consider Nazbol to be some sort of socially conservative ML state that may or may not have a NEP and was not so stringent on following a party line and probably allows nationalists to speak freely no matter how off line it is. That is if one is not the other russia, I don't know what thé really want. Nazbols can also be more authoritarian nationalist and do actually kick people out or not grant citizenship to ethnicities. It's a broad range of people and a spectrum. Similar ideologies are the socially conservative left, the revolutionary conservatives... and maybe the euro-communiats and eurasianists? A simple way to think of it is if one thinks "what if Marx was wrong about the nation"

So a little fun fact about my puppet, "the Gamer Utopia". One of the things that inspired me to create that nation is how people in the TNO community jokingly called Ordenstaat Burgundy the "Gamer Utopia". It was one of the things that inspired me to create a gaming-themed nation, that is borderline burgsys.

yeah sorry for that i just happen to hold no respect for a community that tolerated a bunch of literal russian neo-nazis long enough that they ended up literally doxxing a dev and forcing her to completely remove as much of her internet presence as possible, literally trying to drive her to kill herself, over what amounted to wanting to speed up the dev cycle on her part.

Tbh, I think that the trend of burgsys copy nations on F7 died down significantly, or at least their owners aren't that active anymore, considering that there is only so much fun you can have with such a nation.

(Also, a despotist Free Territory is a way more interesting thing than a bruhsys nation.)

Making whole armies appear out of nowhere and nuking nations for dramatic effect during war RP,s.

Eh, not so much for "dramatic effect" as it is because of the obvious, people like to win or want to see the other sap lose, especially militarily because physically stomping someone to the ground is about as straightforward as you can get and in the tunnel vision'd pursuit of winning for the sake of winning, violence is usually the easiest option. This is the sort of thought philosophy that leads to the soulless military writing that you see concentrated mostly in F7 milthreads, I'll get back to this later. There's a clear difference between someone who makes 24 military factbooks because they genuinely like writing up the hardware and want to make funny bullet go fast and the other folks with 24 military factbooks because they want to win. Just having poorly formatted pictures of mean looking jets and tanks plucked right from the first 20 google images search results is usually indicative of this sort of stuff. They put just enough effort in to have the stuff there as opposed to someone who doesn't give a damn about military worldbuilding and just doesn't do defense factbooks. If you're lucky they'll provide some degree of hardware specifications but most of it will just be illogical, ridiculous, and crammed full of jargon hoping it'll make the armored car or whatever puff up more. Their bark is their bite. They want to have the scary stuff there but they don't want to read up on how the things actually work. I'm not trying to take shots at anything for being 'unrealistic' either as most of the stuff you see at least tries to cling to some degree of sci-fi techno whatever 'realism' but ultimately falls short. There is a clear difference between people who get in fights for the sake of fighting and people who get in fights for the sake of winning. Now, that brings me to the actual topic of winning and how it can be moderated. From my experience, organized RPs are about the best you can get. Either through an outside discord or an OOC thread you can usually bonk anyone trying to godmod. Now a notch below that would be open, unorganized, and the all too common one-liner war threads. I think we all know how those go. This brings me to the last and honestly strangest platform for military interaction, F7. F7's milthreads are a gamble, I'll say that. They work by the same 'take a book, leave a book' system as the rest of the board which allows for both interactions with and constructive criticisms of your work in lengthy detail and without the glacial pace of organized RPs. On the other hand, we're not exactly playing tennis here. Though what happens here is ultimately inconsequential to lore, some people find it absolutely necessary that their military might curbstomps every AN they meet and thus center their entire bloody lore around it. Yes, losing doesn't matter in terms of lore but at the same time overwhelming victories are usually boring and will often completely disregard the military worldbuilding of the losing side. Why yes, logically speaking your advanced forces of stealth fighters and super soldiers would completely steamroll that poor PT civilization with their longboats and bows but it doesn't make for exactly an interesting story does it? The best I can say is, wait your turn. You can't reasonably create a nation able to fight everyone in interesting ways so either have more nations or be patient and wait for someone else to roll around.
