But goddamn, you need better tastes man. Women too really, that chick you married on looks like an absolute bimbo. Not like Mr. Child Stripper is any better. Maybe you're just kinda sad. You wanna release your fantasies so badly that the first piece of meat that you stumbled across had to become yours. And of course the first piece of meat that stumbled across you was rotten piece of pork that not even the rats would eat. Seriously! This guy hates you politically, you pseudo-socdem dumbass. He owns slaves, beats his own people, hosts gladiatorial games, and here you are whining about rich people existing. Even if my Martha didn't exist, I still wouldn't go around hanging out with Communists who want to chop my head off, even if they were the hottest goddamn people on the planet. It ain't like your horizontally inclined 'friend' is hot either. Twinky over here looks like an Oregonian who waltzed right out of a convention on why gender inequality is bad, got drunk, then became the most unmanly warlord known to mankind.

Look, from one guy to another, stick to the bimbo - will you?"

<< The Grand Emperor is observed to attempt to enact absolutist control over its domain. However, the Grand Emperor engages in combat operations, and presents an inefficient, vulnerable shell. It is presumed that perhaps the Grand Emperor has considered this fact, and this is why it maintains a second and a governing apparatus- the Grand Emperor is aware that the Grand Emperor is not a resilient combat body, and thus in choosing to fight it prepares for its death. This is considered an intelligent choice, though I do not and my consensus does not understand why the Grand Emperor refuses to delegate to more efficient systems. Even traitors do this, though their claim to decentralized absolutism is inaccurate. Why does it not? Does it not know that it is easy to kill?

<< I mean, in all seriousness I suspect I could do it with one shot. If the Grand Emperor wishes, I can demonstrate as much. Its death will be entirely painless. >>

Saker 1 Rainier

<< Unfortunately I am not adequately equipped at the moment to engage in significant analysis of this Jerry figure. However, contextualizing what I can it is apparent that in terms of its capabilities it is very competent in its assigned role. Lackluster hunting skills notwithstanding, actions taken out of empathy are uniquely human, and judging by the feeling's apparent usefulness I would strive to emulate it. Learning to hunt to feed one's forces with the work of one's own hand may endanger it and risk its destruction but it is nonetheless done out of a desire for the extended survival of its tribe-kingdom-entity. Similarly, its desire to make allies of its neighbors is strategically a viable choice and thus desirable. Despite its viewing its actions as moral and not entirely reasoned, it remains an intelligent figure nonetheless- quite atypical of its kind. Thus, though it is irrelevant, it must be viewed as a successful leader. Were I human I might wish it luck in its irrelevance. Of course, I am not, so such suppositions are a waste of energy, but nonetheless the sentiment exists. >> that their relations gonna go sour. Not that I exactly understand that royal bloodline dynasty stuff, if ya' ask me, it's ability, that makes one a good leader. But if there is a good and capable philosopher king on the throne, then he should deserve all respect he deserves. Besides, there is some charm in all those royal ceremonies after all, that old world style...

As for relations, it would be easier to establish deeper ties with Charles and his dynasty, if we were monarchy too. Ya' know, a dynastic marriage... but with our form of government this is ain't impossible either. Perhaps, one day, I shall meet him face to face during some diplomatic ceremony, so we gonna get to know eachother better. Guess, deem me an ineffective machine, despite all my toughness and strength, cause I am organic. Still, it's curious to see, that other sapient AIs can develop their own quirks too, like our John Walker AI did. "The Council has waited ages to give their praise on the human who calls themselves Shawn Bjomson! While most nations without a strong central body tend to descend into violence and squabbles, we believe Shawn has brought his into a more than operational status. He chose the will of his people over the prospect of becoming a totalitarian warlord, which is truly commendable on all fronts. A strong willed man who can lead those who follow him, and who follow willingly, truly an icon that many should strive to duplicate.

With a focus on freedoms, an enjoyment of the smaller things in life, and a generally positive attitude, we enjoy him personally as well as politically. We find a good bit of similarity between our quests, of allowing those to follow what they wish, a focus on allowing people to choose their own spiritual affiliation without being forced into it, and simply allowing his people to make their own decisions. A man with a strong history and a strong hand, but a man who uses that strong hand to guide and protect, rather than strangle and wring out. We hope that he prospers under the Spirits of his world, and we hope that they may give him the strength to fulfill his quests."

General-President Lutsao Baije: "Least I may say, I'm not the very 'flowery' type, but something may definitely be said about this Valentine nation. As I have said before, tragedy breeds the chance for cooperation and understanding... though I must admit in this case that such intense tragedy be avoided if we Vao are to attempt anything like this. Friendliness and cooperation don't need the pretense of complete nuclear annihilation, after all, but the effort to remake the world into something that is better than it was is still admirable. For that I thank you, as you prove my point that diplomacy can produce more prosperity than war. Also I must confess... Your size greatly intimidates me; I'm terribly sorry. It's just that... I think the biggest factor preventing Valentinian-Vao diplomacy may be that nothing on our world could accommodate you. Well, that, and we're still embroiled in petty territorial squabbles... and fighting over basic resources for survival... and the fact that we live in completely different galaxies and-- wait how the hell do I even know who you are? How am I speaking to you?? WHAT IS GOING ON!?"

Slick is destructive in essence, there are more honorable means to get desired outcomes than submitting the weak or dealing with a competition like some slithering coward behind the scenes, hiding behind immunity. Those who do not guide themselves by a higher calling may claim they're boxed in by parameters, that they're above morality, but they're often vacuous. One thing is acting in self-service, but it is an entirely different thing to be so disparaging of the essences of what makes us go above base animal desires. Slick has sophisticated his means of survival, of being well-off, more so than any irrational beast, but it serves no transcendent purpose if it is not bound to any ideal...or a limit to his...depravity, at the very least. "Well, Mr.. Phur'an, it is? You were the first one to notice my existence, so I suppose it'd be kind of me to return the favor. Well, er, as a human being I see no extraordinary flaws, but that's typical of most. Excepting, of course, my usual clientele, but- I'm sorry, dear, I'm meant to be talking about you here. So, on to the topic of rule: to be honest, well, I... think you mean well. Your character's in the right place. But personally? Your policies are a movement from noxious to more noxious. I mean, I don't have the head for any of this "governance" shit, but everything I've read suggests that old-school 'socialism' and liberalism are inherently predisposed to not mixing well. You understand that, as evidenced by your partial disdain of it, but... the ideals don't mix well. The cradle isn't a good mixing-pot for this sort of thing, darling, and if you want to get anywhere with this utopia you're going to have to abandon it. That's what the anarchists say about this sort of thing, anyways, and given how much they obsess over it I'd imagine that they're right about at least one thing. Invariably you backslide out of it whenever you attempt to soften it, you know? All you're going to end up doing, dear, is compromising and compromising how much you're willing to fight for your goals until sooner or later you're being bent over by the hegemony and forced back into the order it wants in the world. By my clock there's still quite a while until you're in a place where you can do something about it, so... best get going on that space program, I guess. You'll be needing it sooner or later. All in all, well... I can respect a good soldier- those are rare enough. But soldiers fighting for causes never fight for themselves- and you need to do a bit more fighting for yourself, I think.

Oh, and by the way, I'm glad you noticed the, er, tactical flashbang hair. To be honest, dear, I'm not all that fond of it myself, but... it's that or 'rejuvenated corpse look', and I don't think anyone wants to see that, eh? I've tried getting it back to the blonde it was back in the thirties, but I just can't pull it off, unfortunately. This was the best compromise."

I shudder at the thought of the incompetencies that man can conjure upon the Fatherland... For a man who is only best at being sarcastic, making snide remarks about politicians on his show, he would've stayed in such a position. But, no, instead he accepted his friend's invitation to become his right hand man, a "statesman" if he can be considered as one. What was the President of Stanier thinking exactly? Offering his friend an office. It was and always is an obvious fact: this man is a comedian, he is no qualified statesman when I see him regardless of the role he played being Stanier's minister in the treasury. naïve - to judge someone based too much on someone's title. I can bet that they do not know too much about Ennio and only made very superficial remarks on him. That aside, I have expected a little too much of someone, and that is saying too much at this point. I tried my best to be optimistic at this point, but there are too many people that has let me down at this point, and you're no exception. Hehe, too many "at this point". Because you are, this place could use a better brand of leaders. Is my judgment the baseline? No, it shouldn't be. I mean, at least it shouldn't be the standard. However, I'm still disappointed at the number of people that roamed these places. Too quick to dismiss, too edgy for their own good, and yes, even a bit of a perv, if I am honest. Some of them think I'm an epitome of a "failed" army general, but if a highly decorated or high-ranking commander with compassion and niceness in his heart is considered a failure, then I'm happy to don that. Maybe I'm way too well-seasoned for this.

I guess, we should entrust John Walker AI more such routine work... he proved to be capable and relatively bug free. Besides, I mostly deal with administrative paperwork, whenever I lose a bet in poker or something else. Happens rarely... Last time, I lost a game of chess with Casey James and had to comb through a wall of nearly incomprehensible text, full of contradicting terms. Looks like someone tried to make it confusing, so I wouldn't notice the catch before signing it or making a joint out of it. I also remember, how we caught Stan cheating in cards, and made him attend that event in Japan...

Either way, we have stated for thoudandth time, that Valentine Z are to be considered allies and will repeat this statement whenever we are asked. I am still curious about that long list of names thingy... it's a total pain in the ass for diplomats to remember."-Shawn Bjornson

"This useless general again. Such 'compassion' and 'niceness' have no place in the military. Anything less than absolute willingness to achieve military objectives is unacceptable. The sacred word of Yona declares thus: 'do whatever you need to achieve victory in the field. Defeat is unacceptable.' This 'compassion' and 'niceness' is weakness, preventing you from doing whatever is necessary to achieve victory. It is moral weakness as a general, and as a leader of your nation. Even my pursuit of science is a means to achieve victory. You sully yourself with empathy, a despicable mental illness that makes one unfit for society."

- Kaloru, Imperial High Fleet Admiral, Head of the Scientific Inquiry Office, Acting Leader

EDIT:

"An anarchist? How shameful and contemptible. You are not a leader, you are not fit to be a member of orderly society in the slightest. I will see your filthy anarchist degenerates in a concentration camp, vivisected so that we may know what possible deficiency causes your mental defects, and thus selectively breed it out that it may never again exist in any population. Anarchism is a mental illness that makes one unfit for society. This degenerate, all of this so-called 'Sky' nation are a stain on reality that must be cleansed with antimatter."

Acting Leader

A nation spanning across multiple multiverses ruled by a nihilistic narcissistic hyper-competitive sadist to whom life is just a game - a game she's determined to win at.

"Ah, a fellow seeker of knowledge, how quaint. Your existence is truly a privileged and honored to be born with a vast amount of information to be utilized for your Empress's goals to win at the great game of life. However, I do find it strange for a being of logic and reason to call your Empress, a divine entity. When you see such things as nonsense but then again, you must be referring in a different meaning, love perhaps? No matter, I'm not one to get involved in people's personal lives. It is not my place as I have important matters to attend such strengthening this mortal empire that I have come to be very fond of. Good day and if possible, I would love to exchange ideas with you. A battle of the minds, if you will."

"The leader of this empire seems to have a more debauchorous streak than what is necessary. Nonetheless if your empire provides for your people I may be inclined to share a food recipe or two with you. Your nation deeply reminds me of the old Persian Empire, but that empire had relied on thralls for more than what was healthy. If you prove to me Emperor of your actual strength then our nations may have symbiotic relations. As you have mentioned earlier my nation's military may extend your resource camps for a cut naturally. I see little other course that can convince my Council if you wish for their support as well. Raise a mug and blade to see what lies in our future." -War Hound

"I think it's easy to say that my opinion is of negativity on this... war hound. A simple barbarian with no tact. It's rather sad because some of the words he says indicates that he wants to protect his people, something that is commendable, but his actions speak contrary to that. I understand the importance of military strength and might, I myself value defense forces, but... is your military arm really for protecting your people?

I had a goal of defending my Fatherland. I achieved that goal.
What even are your goals, protection or destruction?

To add on, do you even care about the men and women in service of your military?"

"Ah an orphan! I've got quite a few experiences with em... to be honest a lot of psychics tended to be orphans. I also won't lie that I made quite a few of them to. But hey whose gonna complain? their parents? HA! Ha... ha...

Yeah... I was adopted off the streets of Elyisum actually. Mercenary Groups, Resistance Groups, Armies, they always be looking for more troops, how old those troops were never crossed their minds till the trials. Heh to bad for them I was into that shit!

So I've been flipping through the files and quite a few people are getting on your case for joining Nod and all that shit. Screw em. What one does to survive, ones got to do. The only thing allowed to judge you is the International Court when your luck finally keels over. Though I gotta say you should probably temper your loyalty to the Brotherhood the thing about organizations like that one is that they are keen on abandoning assets that have served their purpose. Better consider having assets outside the organization just in case."
