The Second World War was fought between the Axis and a very interesting allied bloc: the Islamist bloc (which, in this world never decayed and succumbed to the European powers), a Trotskyist USSR and the classic allies. I wonder how a Trotskyist Russia would deal with the german rearmament.

Apparently my reply never existed...

PAS:

1. Pre-revolution history is redacted and restricted, as they'd like to preserve their federation via rewriting history.

2. It appears that Wang Jingwei, of all people, were the one to set the notion of "pan-Asianism" into motion. In the same year, the pro-CCP members were exiled to Luzon, but were able to counterattack and take back the whole of China plus some

AN: CUC's foreign policy includes a military attache to diplomatic missions, which will determine the weaknesses of any nation to backstabbing or extortion. How they use this info... I'd say not pretty.

One thing I learned is that the Middle East is extremely cursed. Iran is large, but for some reason, its territories expand further east (which would mean trouble with Russia and Britain at the height of their respective powers) and - for some reasons- doesn't include Khuzestan, which in turn goes to an Uber Arabia/Caliphate. Similarly, South Africa includes all of Mozambique, but not Southwest Africa -which at some point it did control- nor Rhodesia and Bechaunaland -which at some point it really really wanted to.

AN: A total of 1,377,000 soldiers fought on the two sides for a heavy conflict going roughly for four months in what should be considered a border conflict, and while it ended in the total annihilation of one side, the casualty number on the two sides seems hilariously lopsided to the point it would be impossible even in a world of Eagleland where the "good guys" win without any effort.

As formality demands, the Tsar of Turtlesroom usually has the pretile of His/Her Most Sober Majesty as a gesture abroad. At home, in formal ceremonies, an entire paragraph of epithets, titles and places they lord over are listed.
