Waldemar Rochester

"Alright, who do we have here... wait, is that the guy who guy who wanted to make fun of me for my leadership? I honestly don't see how providing my country with stability is considered 'oppression'. So, Liam Navarro, the 'overboss?' Okay, interesting title for a leader. I say, while some of the stuff he did was good, ultimately I cannot, in good riddance, consider him to be a good leader, let alone a person.

Let's start off with the fact that Navarro is a lazy person. I am a person who values hard work and dedication in order to achieve my goal. And he is a person with a lot of potential - I mean, he possesses an incredible natural talent and is pretty intelligent. And when he was in the university, he would've used his time to study, but I'm still impressed how he somehow managed to pass university classes by other means. Nonetheless, I am glad he got his degree in the Arts. But other than that, he is a pretty disgusting individual. He once stole a famous painting from a French museum, stole a prison inmate, and worst of all, did some disgusting things to a prominent Sky Reaver actress that I couldn't say. It's just... wow! Honestly, I don't know why I would be denounced for my alleged 'authoritarian' governance by this man, while he can do things that are just horrid to say to least.

Navarro is also probably the most erratic person I've ever met. When you are a leader of a country, you make sure to keep your people happy and safe. Navarro has, for the most part, neglected this position, and instead plays video games and do some other horrid stuff. Much of the stuff he advocated for us what I am against, and Vice versa. Nonetheless, I could find one good thing about this man, that being his "Enthorean Rebirth" policy. I have heard about the horrible 25 years the people have suffered under the violent cultural suppression of this man named 'Edgar', and I am glad you are trying to preserve the culture and identity of your country. I believe in the maintenance and perseverance of traditions and cultures in countries, no matter how long they last. Again, Mr. Navarro, for trying to maintain your country's culture, I laud you.

Other than that, I can't really say that Liam Navarro is good. He's kinda a mess as a leader, as he's for the most part neglected the role, and as a person, he is far worse, as he is shown to be lazy and erratic. We also have opposing views, which, all this combined, would truly make an alliance hard to create between the two of our nations. I hope you can understand, Overboss Navarro. The attempt the maintain your culture is great, but that doesn't necessarily mean that I feel you are good for your country."

"There is very little difference between this reptilian monarch and the menagerie of monsters I face on a nearly weekly basis. In saying such I do not hold him in high regard. At the same time, I do not hold him in very low regard for I have encountered people and entities far more dangerous and malevolent than he. There are those already out there working to put an end to his machinations, negating a need for intervention on my part. Therefore my opinion on this subject matter is largely that of indifference." -The Emperor

"Official sources regarding this being appear to be nonexistent with the exception of the picture above. One of the island's younger inhabitants claims to me that he is known as Bowser or King Bowser, but given that their source turned out to be a human video game I must regard this information as exceptionally dubious at best. What I can gather definitively is that this 'Bowser' enjoys kidnapping princesses as a pastime, something as villainous as it is stereotypical, and that he has an army of some sort to utilize to this end. From what little I have to go on my opinion is profoundly negative."

- High Priestess Mai Chie of Ketorushima

EDIT: Ninja'd. Sorry for taking so long, there's a lot to read.

AN:"In pleasant contrast to the previous leader I commented on, there is a wealth of information available regarding the Emperor Dominus and the interstellar polity he leads. As there is still a great deal I have not read on him and I am expected to give this response promptly, I will here rely chiefly on the data regarding his actual governance of the Victoran Empire.

The Emperor appears to be making a wise decision in taking a hands-off approach to governance, given the unique vastness of the nation he leads. Even large planet-bound states fall victim to mismanagement and fracturing when their leaders attempt to centrally micromanage them, so attempting to do this with a country spanning part of a galaxy would be an extreme folly. Of course, the Emperor being entirely inactive would be inexcusable, and he thankfully cannot be described as such. He takes initiative on basic universal matters such as fighting corruption and matters that by nature must be managed at the highest level like foreign policy. It is here that he particularly earns my favor by proscribing the invasion and conquering of non-hostile planets outside of the Empire's control. This contrasts greatly with the image of an expansionist empire that admittedly first came to mine when I learned of the Victoran Empire, and signals that our interactions might be pleasant if we were to somehow come into contact. Even if circumstances did force our Earth to become part of the Empire, it seems as though our planet's unique customs and values would be allowed to remain in place. Currently I have a positive opinion of the Emperor, though I will make sure to continue reading through his files to gain a more complete understanding of him and his Empire."

"Hm, a spiritual leader? Then her society is a theocracy... not something I'm entirely comfortable with, though Mai Chie's governance so far doesn't reveal anything all that noxious. In fact, Mai Chie does so little governing that the island operates as a kind of 'peaceful anarchy,' a state of non-governance that I would love to see Classroom 3-B achieve someday. I guess that has less to do with Mai Chie than with the weight of tradition, but hey, at the very least she hasn't bungled it or anything.

"As for the policies that are more uniquely her own, I hope she opens herself up more to modernization. Kitsune may not be humans, but they're still thinking and feeling beings, and I'm confident there must still be a Proletariat among them! The nation needs to industrialize in order to awaken the Proletariat to their subjected state, and once they are conscious of their class they can launch a revolution like the many you have studied!

"Ugh, a theocracy? This so-called 'High Priestess' truly believes she is some kind of incarnation of a medieval fox god? Please, get real! Mai, would you mind joining us in the modern world instead of playing around in the sandbox of history? Because of your superstitions, you promote false virtues like charity for others and denounce true virtues like greed, and you shackle yourself to the island instead of living life as a man and getting what you want in life by traveling where you please. You enjoy studying the history of revolutions as if it were a matter of trivia, evidently failing to realize your own island is in need of a major revolution: a revolution of reason, a revolution of freedom, a revolution of the individual over the cloying collectivism of spirituality!"

Jojo Washburn

"Uhhhh, Francine, you realize that the High Priestess and her people are yōkai, right? Or... do you? Like I just mean—can it really be called 'superstition' if it's real? Did you check out the images of the High Priestess? That doesn't look like superstition! That looks like magic! And I mean—like—whoa! Magic is real! Yōkai and kitsune are real! How cool is that?

"As for the High Priestess, I actually think she seems pretty cool! Say whatever you want about charity, Francine, but for most of us it's a good virtue and one that I'm glad the High Priestess espouses! Really, she seems like a good leader, the best kind of spiritual guide! She wants her people to have peace and happiness, and she promotes living in harmony, without violence, without prejudice, and without being too materialistic. It's kind of sad that she can't leave Ketorushima while serving as High Priestess... but I think that's noble, not shameful! And Freddy, I would worry less about whether or not the yōkai are following Marx's formula for revolution and more on whether or not life is working out for them now. I guess the High Priestess is still modernizing a little, so it sounds like the kitsune do want some modern conveniences. But while they might not have a democracy, they do have a harmonious way of life.

"I'd like to meet High Priestess Mai Chie someday! Maybe I could bring her some souvenirs, alleviate a little bit the fact that she can't travel anymore. I, uh, guess that'd have to wait until after our Revolution expands beyond just the one classroom... but someday!"

He is the spark, that like Lenin himself, ignited the red fire of world revolution! An aurora borealis, localized entirely within his classroom! Yeah, the place, where this lil' dude has to endure dark sarcasm and traditional values of teachers. And in the internet... Shit! Almost pissed myself from laughter! But wait a minute... does it say, that he negotiates with smugglers? Hmmm... I suppose some booze money won't harm. He can just send me a request and I shall grant it. Besides... if he and his gang studies well and uses his knowledge creatively, there is a potential to become a real political force. Pranav Sarkar

"According to this profile, this 'Emperor' individual was born nearly 3.5 billion years ago, around when photosynthesis first began on Earth. Gallifrey must be an ancient world indeed. It would seem that his life was filled with excitement, which is perhaps to be expected given that he is the product of some sort of quasi-eugenic project. My own life seems positively dull in comparison, despite having had more of it. Frankly, it's a miracle that he's as stable as he is, I suspect many would have broken down completely after going through all of that."

"Now, politically speaking I am very much opposed to the concept of Emperors and Empires, constitutional or otherwise. I would have hoped that a civilisation capable of expanding across the galaxy would have advanced beyond such things. I am not going to judge this Emperor too harshly, but there seems to be little advancement in the social, political and economic spheres from those of 21st century Earth. Is this really the best that the galactic power can do? One would think that with access to the resources and technologies they possess, a much better arrangement would be possible."

"Given my opposition to Communism, and his support for biocommunist, which I assume is a variant of the aforementioned ideology, I can't really say I like Pranav Sarkar. While I am intrigued by his vast knowledge and scholarship at the University of Melbourne in Australia, and while I do feel sorrow for the loss of family members, I still don't see what the purpose was for a Communist revolution in Australia. Personally I'd say that Australia would already be in a good position prior to the revolution. If it was in a bad position, it might've been more understandable. I also hear that Sarkar here is calling for a 'worldwide revolution'? While I will support a cause against oppressive tyranny, in my opinion, for it to be worldwide and for the same cause is not the right way to do it. And I've seen what has happened to countries that implemented Communism. And overall, I don't really see Pranav Sarkar as a good leader for his country."

What the hell do we have here? President Francisco Franco of the United States. I already knew that the Americans are a horrid people, but to invade and indoctrinate my fellow Europeans into their way of life?! Franco... I thought you were better than that. You are worse than a yank, you are a traitor! Your so called 'disdain for despots and monarchists' is just a thinly veiled attempt to justify your treason! You don't care about the people, you and your Yank puppet-masters just used it as an excuse to curtail the independence of Europe. Not only that, but as president, you've actively strengthened their military.

I don't know what you think, but here in the European Remnant, we have a huge disdain towards traitors who want to see our continent ripped apart. You combine the worst aspects of the seperatists and the Americans into one unholy fusion that needs to be destroyed if Europe wishes to survive. Worst part is that you should have known better than this. You saw what they did to your people in the early 1900s, and you still enlisted into the enemy's navy you collaborationist filth! At least here in the Remnant, traitors often get what they deserve.

No, everything your reading is true. Just because your pathetic body couldn't possibly have such power doesn't mean the rest of the universe can't. The physics of our planet are VERY, different than on earth. The land here is actually quite sturdy. Maybe you just aren't smart enough to read the part where New Zoigai is on a different planet, but I don't really care at this point.

Also for someone who doesn't even reveal their real age to their people. I don't see how or why you're asking any of those questions. You're quite literally a ghost pretending to care about your people. You being presumably 20 would explain some things, but for all I know you could be a 40-year-old man putting on the mask of youth to make yourself feel better. So maybe cut down on the shit talking?

Let's see today's file. Yunru, leader of some Paramilitary, whiz-kid extraordinaire, and a little nuts too. Also, from the not-so-distant-future. If your bio is correct, you've proven yourself to be a decent negotiator when striking alliances with people who'd otherwise be your enemies to handle a bigger threat, or at least evade it; you've shown yourself to be adaptable by working out how the MCV thing works—quite a handy thing to have, to be honest, that thing does sound impressive from an engineering perspective and in its applications—if the fact you were a young prodigy in one of the PLA's R&D think-tanks wasn't enough of a hint; and you've shown commitment to your goals. Sure, not without risks, but hey, everything is a calculated measure. All the more admirable in a context where you lack the situational awareness and a cohesive Command and Control center from your bosses...or ex-bosses, better said. Maybe I'm too much of a history geek by romanticizing what was without a doubt an unenviable struggle for survival and quasi-pilgrimage. But come on? Basically leading your Children's Crusade, or should I say, your Conscripts' Crusade in search of that promised land over the horizon sounds very cool, stressful in your shoes yes, but I'm a detached observer.

But eeeeehhhh, then you cracked from all that stress and the realities of war being anything but an adventure. Yeah, sure, I've heard that genius and madness are divided by a blurry line but Ryunru, Ryunru...Yunru I mean....with all that technology your people have and all that talk about...uh, mind control (?) and psi-corps (?)...you all should think of something medical. I dunno, something like neuron growth therapy because, frankly, you're some sandwiches short of a picnic so to say. You need to connect some wires. That paranoïds gonna put a strain on your top-to-bottom approach if you don't have the Chairman's charisma.

Sure, that Yuri guy seems quite scary but worrying about him and your bastion's well-being all the time will be detrimental to morale. Come on Miss 996, you're a great worker but you need to know when to stop: take a hot bath, watch some films, kill some neurons with a little alcohol, ask Feng and Anatoly to double-team you — in basketball.

Remember that flying saucer with strange lights you saw hovering over the sky? Of course you don't. That never happened. And if it did, it was Venus.

nothing about how to be a quartermaster, but still managed to become a competent one. He just randomly charges at an enemy unit and manages to kill them all. It's sad that his political campaign as marred by people trying to spread rumors, but he appears to have gotten past them. I can understand wanting to retire from politics for a while as the political stage can be a stressful place. It appears his profile is incomplete, so I can't finish my assessment of him."

"By the great teachers, a magic-wielding woman who bears SANE armor! This might seem odd, but it is such a novelty that I feel as if some cosmic injustice has--even if only in a small part--been corrected. Now, while I might not be one for humility and such, I can see that you are not the kind to hold that over anyone, which is another breath of fresh air and no mistake! You seem to hold to your knights' oaths most dutifully, and you do not appear to be spoiling for a fight. If it seems like I am sniffing about you in an awkward manner, I most sincerely apologize. There is so much fresh air around you that I want to isolate the scent. Maybe if I spritz it on all the edgelords I see around here it will make them 'chill out?"
