How about when you're in a F7 thread about ANs factbooks, so you decide to read it, but when you open it, you notice that ANs overview factbook is as long as a novel.

This isn't a cliché but how many people here remember when NationStates more actively promoted the book it was based on?

Yeah, the only ad I see now on the sidebar is Providence. I remembered when Jennifer Government was on the top all the time.

That is, of course, until I got Postmaster-General on my main (i.e. this one).

I wonder if Max could cycle between his books. Not that it would be anything major, but it would be a neat touch and shows more of his work instead of just the recent publication.

I still remember when the game was called Jennifer Government: NationStates ,instead of just NationStates.

Edit: They need to bring back the old 'Inspired by the novel Jennifer Government' thing on the main page if you weren't logged in. That was there for literal years, checking the Wayback Machine, it was removed between the end of January and start of March 2019.

Ahh so that was quite a while back. But yeah, I certainly won't mind, it's a neat little reminder of where this game got its roots from.

I personally don't really see Nazbol as a edgy ideology. If one tries to force it to be one thinking it's some weird amalgamation of bolshevikism and fascism and not the nationalist bolshevikism as derived after the fall of the soviet union or the Alliance of KPD and a separate national peoples republic of Germany or a Socialism with Kulak characteristics as in Ustolov conception then it's not Nazbol and the user is most likely using it as a shock account if it is not derived from those three movements I described.

Let's be honest, the vast majority of ideologies outside of modern liberalism and social democracy are used to be edgy on NS.

Especially National Bolshevism out of all possible ideologies. I rue the day when zoomers around the world looked to Jreg as their source of political education.

Imagine following an ideology that's a functional fusion of two ideologies that are incompatible and opposed with each other.

(I could be talking about either National Bolshevism or anarcho-capitalism here tbh)

National Bolshevism, AnCaps, really most of the 'haha funni and unique' ideologies that exist on this site.

It's like a Polybius Strip as well. They become so wacky and zany that they end up becoming generic and stale because there's nothing to their nations other than their political ideology being "funny".

anarcho-capitalism is just left-wing market anarchism without the labor theory of value, which isn't exactly a critically acclaimed masterpiece of a theory if it has an entire wikipedia page of people slagging it off.

You see a whole lot more nations these days with some mention of ideology or general functioning system as part of the name, usually in the form of (ideology)ian (country). I've only been around for just under two years now so I could be completely wrong but that's how I've seen the trend going recently. These nations fall into the pit of being too fixated on whatever their ideology is and what it does or what their country does because of it while everything else is either absent or bland. I understand that Nationstates is a politically focused Australian browser game but seeing whateverism take center stage instead of anything else part of a nation 4 times out of 5 really drains from the overall experience, especially on F7. Militaries can also fall victim to this but considering the how and the why people do these things, it's a whole realm of its own.

I don't know why it's hard for people to do unique ideologies without having to resort to weird and wacky things that have never been tried in real life and have even been discredited in theory. If they're not doing that, it's only monarchism, fascism, Soviet style communism or social democracy.

I feel like once people leave the comfort zone of doing European or American themed nations then you can get into unique ideologies that actually exist in real life on a national scale. You can't exactly do a Baathist Germany or Kemalist Britain after all.

Imagine thinking Nazbol is a fusion of two ideologies that are incompatible and opposed to each other.

It's literally an ideology that fuses elements of Bolshevism and fascism.

And we all know the Bolsheviks and fascists were the best of friends and there was certainly no fighting between believers in those ideologies at all whatsoever. It was all completely peaceful between them.

Edit: Also you have a fuckin Hatsune Miku flag so IDK why I'm even pretending to care about your opinion.
