"Wilkins would be much better for society if he were a dismembered corpse buried in a mass grave with the rest of his degenerate kind. He is just another speck of dust to be wiped off existence. His politics only scream Bolshevism and sympathy for the red germs and the anarchist mites, and his personality is only a sign of weakness. The anomalies in his nation lead me to suspect magic behavior, something the perfect kingdom of them all can not tolerate. He is not worthy of existence and would be among the first targets to be exterminated in our eternal empire. Natural Selection is not in favor of him or his flimsy people."

WORD of The President

"Among figures I am glad Ankras will never have to deal with in our part of the multiverse."

"She is, in practice, a monarch. A pope of a state that endorses in its platform economic and political imperialism. A pope whose platform is a face of capitalist exploitation. No pretense of her being a positive or progressive influence should ever be made.

That being said, even someone of her age, of her combative ability, whether of legitimate concern or of mass people's pressure, it does not matter, is incapable of not giving some leniency to the most marginalized of society. Commendable but not fundamentally progressive."

Their Majesties, the King and Queen of New Carthagea

Europe's Most Gorgeous!

"Ah, it's the Scythian horsewoman! I have heard many stories about her from my dear friend Smith of Nacrad. A funny lady, really. In today's world of modern warfare, her rustiness and willingness to fight melee is of course, rather barbaric. On the other hand, though, as a fellow person who has served in the military, I do admire her chivalry. Despite all this, I do not like her very much, probably because of her pagan beliefs and primitiveness."

"Chris, there is no need to call her a pagan! Ari, dear, hello! I must say, Christophe here can get quite irritable at times. Don't take his comments to the heart. I think you are an absolutely wonderful being. Although, I would suggest, you must use more of your power and authority over the council; after all, you can't pay them for supporting you forever."
