idk if this counts as a "cliche", but tbh i see a lot of people ranting at "summies" on F7 and RP even if some of these "summies" actually clearly have decent writing potential (and just maybe misunderstand F7/Forum etiquette or some other element). sure it's annoying when you get summerposted but at the end of the day if we just let a clique of "effortposters" immediately dismiss promising nations for a few one-liners as "summies", we're only going to see a lot more summerposters and a remaining, remarkably insular clique of bitter and unhappy "effortposters".

YES, this, YES YES YES

This is probably the most accurate thing ever said here. So many people complain about "summerposters" (whatever the hell that even means) for little to no reason. Like, yeah, I can get getting pissed when someone gives you a reply of one line with no effort, but, there are a lot of people on here that simply don't have the patience to write an essay for F7. Like me for example, I can't write multiple paragraphs in one sitting. But yeah, there's like a handful of essay writers who complain about "summies", but they never offer any suggestions or constructive criticism.

Like, idk about you, but I don't have the time to read your 6,000 word factbook and pick out its deeper meaning while writing a reply for F7. F7! I can understand long writing for RPs, but F7? I would prefer if people put some decent effort in, but not goddamn essays.

Nice try, but even if someone were to use Summerposter correctly, you are one of those who would still fall under it.
Your attempts at looking good by attacking bad tropes are rather embarrassing to watch.
Maybe try to improve your writing ability and start a new, non-generic Right-Wing Americawank next time instead of attempting to pretend that what you created has any merit.

Idk about F7 but at least for RPs, if it is a plot relevant RP, I usually want to avoid low effort posters for the sake of maintaining a good story and not using the OP hammer all the time. I don't like gatekeeping either, but I don't want full on first time RPs usually

When I was a first time RPer Cuscy just involved himself and taught me about RP. It's all about how people interact in the community, not "first timers".

TAR doesn't really fit the criteria of what I'd describe as a summerposter, it's just a fairly rapidly-executed concept a goddamn reason for why you think that, or a post that goes beyond "I don't know him".

tbh, you do have a fair point in that the definition of summerposter is kind of loose, but something I've noticed is that people tend to chalk it down to at least a variant of this: "poster who puts in so little effort (i.e: in the most egregious of cases, not even going beyond the sidebar - as has happened to me in the Opinion about AL thread, or as has happened to quite a few people in the Favorite line from AN's Factbooks thread - or, in threads like the distinguishing feature about AN one: the flag, and nothing else) you might as well have not been posted on". in my case, this has nothing to do with factbook quality, and more to do with posting etiquette in general (although both being poor do tend to go hand-in-hand).

something that you will notice as time goes on that 90% of those summies won't improve no matter what you do or how you talk to them. and yet, it's from this type of summies where you'll get a fuckton of posts, no matter how many times you /stillme, or how many times you try saying nicely to PLEASE say something more than just "flag cool" or "factbook good". the 10% that do often do it by themselves, and, in fact, can and have become friends with effortposters. just ask val z about me, for example.

that being said, as UIJ and SR said above me, you're not what I'd consider a summerposter. at most, just someone whose lore is... dubious. if you want more details, hmu on a TG, I'll be detailed about it.

We did offer you constructive criticism when you were still on the F7 server, you continued to ignore it and get mad about our suggestions whenever we would point out bad things about CAR's nonsensical lore such as the illogical mixture of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam into a collective 'Abrahamic faith'. We also offered you criticism of your history and the general 'wankiness' of your nation, and asked how and why this America would maintain control of the entirety of Earth (in addition to how CAR's Earth is a utopia given the vast disparity of nations) without collapsing in an inevitable global war as understandably, people do not like being under the control of America.

Don't act like you're an innocent victim of being called a summerposter without being offered help first. We offered you critique, you just spat it back into our faces and got mad when people mocked you for it.

Really at the end of the day the biggest problem is that people just take this game way too seriously.

This is an extremely basic and satirical web game based on some Aussie dude's (honestly not that good) political satire novel that just happened to gain an audience of fuckin-losers people interested in politics, nation building, etc.
