"Correct me if I'm wrong, but Ogata reminds me of myself somewhat in a few details. We both served in the military for a good period of time, we both had to work our way up from poor beginnings to our position of power... Well, that's about it aside from the trivial stuff. Overall? I like her, but she seems a bit extreme with some things. Christianity isn't the best religion, sure, but its impact on civilization? That can't really be ignored. It's still not something I personally believe in, though. That and her dislike of social conservatism. I'm no reactionary, but I still think some amount of tradition is the backbone of our society. Without it, we'd just club each other to death without reservation. That and her dislike of what those on Earth call 'socialism'. It's most likely a cultural thing, but I still think it's worth pointing out how I disagree with Ogata on that. Overall, though? I like her and hope she succeeds politically even more than she already has."

"Commander Franco's ruthlessness in dealing with spies is positively repulsive. Something that's less positive and more straight-up repulsive is his liberal use of nukes where battles can't be won. I know nukes are like blockbuster bombs in his universe, but it's still absolutely horrific and utterly immoral. His stalwart defense of France is something i grudgingly respect. Not retreating under nuclear weapons and also not getting annihilated is impressive enough, but he managed to win the battles. Kudos to him for that, i guess.

Going into some of his beliefs, even if he may be a communist bastard, i admire how he realised Stalinism was fucked up, while a lot of his other "comrades" were at least partly blinded, but he also had the good sense not to tell anyone that's what he thought. I do find it a little self-contradictory that he is in favor of both peace and militarism, but hey, the world's crazy, anything goes. Combine that with his support for civil rights and looking out for the wellbeing of his troops, I am tempted to call him a good communist."

"She seems to have numerous psychological issues, and while this should not be used to judge her as a monarch or a person, I am disturbed by the fact that she killed her own father. Perhaps, if I came to know her, I would understand her motivations more. Then again, if she was not close with her parents, it would be understandable that she developed a negative relationship with them.

"I do hope she receives proper treatment and is able to manage her condition, and can rule effectively while forming long-term mutual relationships with those around her. That being said, I know she is from the not-so-distant future; in our time, her father is still alive and will die next year. I wonder how a relationship between our nations will form while we are in slightly different timelines."

"A peculiar one. Alisa isn't... a bad person, but she suffers immensely from her insecurities. You can't deal with psychological irregularities if you don't admit they're there and lash out at people who notice them. I know that firsthand... There would be no S.K.M. Friedrich V if Fritz von Hohenzollern the person didn't have friends to confide in and to help him. And there will soon be no Alisa I if she doesn't pull herself out of this manic cycle she seems to be stuck in."

"Since I'm speaking privately, I may as well tell it like it is: I'm rapidly losing my patience with Alastair. There's enjoying a good drink or a party, and then there's his sorry fucking excuse for a life. A monarch is supposed to be a worthwhile symbol of unity for his people. A monarch should help legislators and administrators. A monarch should run charitable organizations. A monarch should be an incorruptible watchdog. When you don't give a damn about any of those duties which have been given to you to balance out the generous privilege of your bright-blue royal blood, you might as well abdicate. Or at least pull in that gut, because you're way too young to slack off on that."

If similar sh*t happened there, cities like Nukus would go oof, sure, but the nomads in Ustyurt or Kyzylkum probably wouldn't even notice, and would continue to live as lived. Anyways, back to this individual."

"Born in Canada, but grew up in California... Huh, talk about a travel. As for anyone knowing about magic being declared a terrorist... It reminds us of some universe, but we can't exactly puzzle out what exactly that universe it is. At least she got the skills and bravery to survive a global nuclear war, and being promoted in rank later on."

"Huh, in politics we could perhaps get along on idea of secularism, security, and being against theocracy, along with opposing primitivists. From what we have heard of ancaps, they are particularly unsavory types, and libertarianism of any kind is no bueno there. It is a bit funny of how she is against authoritarianism, yet also is very serious about her job as head of security - sure, those can be compatible, but good ol' authoritarianism goes hand in hand with security."

"She witnessed a conflict, and promised a lot of broken souls to find a home where they could live in peace - let's just say that it already shows a lot of leadership skills. At least unlike other commanders she worked alongside with her people as well, and didn't only give orders from a soft-cushioned chair. We can respect that, definitely."

"She rules over an empire where social classes are non-existent, alright... We are kind of skeptical, but we will take it. The rest of her social views sound pretty similar to socialism or something, which is not always a bad thing, if not executed in a way like the bastards from USSR did. Politically, we can understand her anti-democratic sentiment, as a lot of candidates in conventional democratic countries are indeed con artists. That said, a bad dictator's damage is even more irreversible, so an authoritarian council is compromise in world of mortals."

"Overall, while there are some things we might find weird, and we wouldn't want to get in a fight with her, our opinion is overall positive. Also, we share the sentiment of working with "proper" democracies as long as they don't try to shove their views down in throats, which sadly happens quite a lot at times."

The Karakalpak Revolutionary Directorate

OOC: I think you confused Kadrea Cooper, Head of Security, and Alexa Chambers (Aka Ms. Satan), who is our actual leader as Officer of Finances. They are different people.

"Mr. Sauer has clearly proven that he is no friend of freedom or democracy, he took power by force and is enforcing his rule through the military, something that infuriates me and many other Americans. He would've never gotten any power in our nation, nor would he have kept it for long."-President Theodore Roosevelt

"He's literally Theodore Roosevelt. He fought in the Spanish-American War, has a glorious moustache, created national parks, and has a tattoo of his family crest on his chest. Once, he got shot during a campaign speech and did not go to the hospital until after finishing the speech. That is a level of grit I aspire to attain when dealing with Parliament--anyway, they passed a bill, so I must read it over and decide whether to veto it or not."

-King Alastair Laertes Amadeus Ludwig Kehrer IV

OOC: I think you confused Kadrea Cooper, Head of Security, and Alexa Chambers (Aka Ms. Satan), who is our actual leader as Officer of Finances. They are different people.

And yes, smoking, drinking, and all sorts of drugs are really popular, as a form of coping mechanism. Life after the collapse is highly stressful, as surviving the next day isn't really guaranteed, and everyone has lost so much. There aren't really any therapists around either, so... people turn to what they know.

Yes, I knew that Alexa Chambers was the actual leader, but I thought that I was supposed to do the character which was used in the post. Well, I will know that next time.
