Their Ministry of Internal Security has between 200 to over 10,000 employees; we're not quite sure, because they're paranoid to the point of annihilationism.

Although the Federation of Europe is not a de jure classical federation, and theoretically the national governments should have a degree of power similar to that wielded by them in IRL EU, the federal government has largely overshadowed the national governments, and most of the political power is held by provincial/city authorities and the federal government. This would be a pretty neat system for the real EU, if only we Europeans could leave nationalism behind.

Christophe commissioned into the NC Army. I wonder what he was referred to as, 1Lt Silverspoon? And hey, maybe it explains some stuff, like the territory war.

Leaf water good. Bean water bad. David Ricardo was on to something and so was Eugene Stoner.

Only the trends are canon, not individual stats. If you want to get angry very quickly, I recommend Twitter.

They're absolutely annihilating a bunch of poor people in desert countries; they're currently heading towards Cairo, and are causing general chaos all around the Levant and Arabia.

Their social structure places a heavy emphasis on personal achievement and fulfillment. Kinda like the Godulans... but with less vicious resistance against two massive existential threats (or at least depending on the version of the States in their timeline)

Yep, because I'm a big weeb who can't come up with things other than anime and magic and because I developed the 666th way before I thought about making Azur Deutschland, which, when I made this nation, lead to me going "Oh, how do I make Germany win?" :P

What I found out: That apparently the inhabitants of territory of Occidens Praseodymia can trace down their nation's roots all the way to 6520 BC when the city state of Eroha was established. It means that it would be the oldest city-state in the world, even older than Eridu which is the oldest city-state IRL (5400 BC). Either way pretty impressive.

It's a moderately sized nation with a moderately sized? (Not obese nor underweight?) and devout population with a strong Canadian vibe.

So maybe it's just Canada.

And it's Geography Dispatch has "Oh Canada, oh Canada" on it, so maybe it's just Canada.

But some reason despite being Canada they maintain a large military for their size.
