"The information on President Jaye is regrettably limited. It would appear that he took part in a revolution against his territory's previous government, but with no knowledge of what that government was I cannot say whether or not that was justified. It would appear he is committed to democracy and the general freedom of his nation's citizens. Reading further it seems that Tranzoria has outlawed an entire religion, and is potentially suppressing another, both worrying pieces of information. Pending additional information my opinion on Jaye himself is currently neutral."

Fuck it, Caudillo Galtieri time

Fast forward to 1976 after the Patron's untimely death; the new Argentine military governor in town, General Leopoldo Galtieri, rigidly marched to his office - saluted a portrait of His Majesty Juan I of Peronist Argentina - and sat down in his chair that the Patron once sat. Routed all lines of communications to Patagonian Argentina away from the Patagonian Regency.

"Yes you are now speaking to me..."

"I see you are a High Priestess... with fox tails and ears to boot! You seem to be a friendly fellow but the things you preach sounds like Buddhism or Shintoism to me. The values that Allende preaches... But I know that you're some kind of inhuman so the matter remains a gray area for Argentine law. As long as you look humanoid enough then we'll welcome you with open arms and slight suspicion in Argentina... Dealing with this kind of matter is beyond my jurisdiction."

But on his grandfather's deathbed, he took the warrior's path and with great skill and resolve he first served the justice, and then rallied the people, and led them to war against bandit regime and won. He is a true warrior and defender of the people, who will not even flinch, when facing scum. I may not agree on everything, but I endorse his efforts!
