This has... surprisingly happened to me, at least the first part

Quite a few nations have criticized Wexas' implied lax policies regarding COVID (as in, I had a few nations say "wtf, why are your people hosting games, not wearing masks, etc") when... it takes place 737 years after 2020 in a distinctly medieval universe.

At least yell at them for relevant stuff like Cholera/The Plague/The-disease-implied-to-be-a-strain-of-Anthrax-that-possibly-destroyed-human-civilization,

it'd also make the planet hard to invade if 95% of it is either super hot or deadly cold and the only hospitable area would likely be easy to defend the former idea, at least, requires some pretty crazy megastructure engineering to even be remotely possible by our understanding of modern physics, in addition to metamaterials that do not exist in the present day to human knowledge. the latter reaches into unproven theoretical physics and can't be judged by any objective standard.

...but given that most people, even those who aren't writing explicitly about mt stuff, will not really move their geopolitical focus beyond one nation, much less one planet, describing the actual physical structure of a world in a way meaningfully differentiating from the one we know would simply clutter the narrative one wants to create.

to be honest this thing of making planets non-round has already gotten stale so we'll just leave it at that

Why does every nation have a 'population', it's such a cliché. We need more nations that are just empty wastelands with absolutely no life in them.

That is where factbooks come in, no?

But it'd be a bit redundant; given that there's nothing & no one in this scenario, it wouldn't really make for an interesting story.

I'm glad this hasn't happened to me yet on NS, but someone will probably be like "LukaSHENKO DiD nOthIng wRONG", "TrUsT tHe ExPeRtS", say stuff like that. because it's totally never happened somewhere else online before. And I'm always like, "What?!? This man has KILLED innocent people, who just wanted to be heard, and meant no harm!" I always get so confused, like did they not do their research? also I'm glad no one has shamed me for being socialist...

Clearly you don't read NSG nearly enough. You'll easily be able to find people who say that kinda shit without any degree of irony. Because every site has to have Russophiles and anti-American dictatorship advocates.

...Yknow I've been thinking a lot lately about starting a VR-themed nation. In VR, there are no such pesky limit like "the planet must be round". Nor are there any limitations on magic, or catgirls, or inefficient economics, or anything really. Heck there isn't any restriction on reality itself — you can install artstyle to the very fabrics of reality, and by artstyle I mean an IC reason of why all your character photo are anime characters. I am thus transcended from mere mortals who are universally subjected to this cliché. Worship me.
