Not (necessarily) a crime. Of course, if that blasphemy has anything to do with violent actions, it would be illegal, but if you harm nobody else nor their property, it is not a crime.

Exposing pictures of another individual while they are indecent.

Hate Crimes

We don't take kindly to such things, and are liable to lynch or assassinate someone who does such things. Either way, we're making an example of them, hopefully before the damned lawmen do.

We employ members of many different intelligent species across different cultures, ethnicities, languages, religions, biological sexes, sexualities, and gender identities. Discrimination is bad for our bottom line, and such dangerous persons who would commit hate crimes go against our economic interests and the interests of our valued employees and contractors, as well as the interests of our customers, as we make it a point to offer our fine and illicit goods and services to anyone who desires them. No one demographic has a monopoly on criminal enterprise - we employ all demographics and service all demographics. We'll do any crime that is profitable for said profits... and hate crimes, they are not profitable. They drive away customers and disrupt the market.

In addition, we make it a point to drive out as much unorganized crime in cities where we operate; disorganized crime either results in a hiring or being driven out, and we sure aren't hiring a bigot. If this person thinks they can do crime in our territory without us noticing, they're a fool, and if they think they can do crime we don't approve of in our territory, they're a damned fool.

If we can catch them with their guard down in public, we'll straight up shoot them down in broad daylight, to make a point that we do not tolerate such things in our turf. If we cannot, we shall have them assassinated by our in-house contract killers, and their mutilated cadaver displayed in public, hanging by their entrails from the lantern post, coated in honey so the flies and rats shall feast. Either way, they are a warning to everyone else - we do not tolerate such behavior, and anyone else attempting it will meet the same fate.

Tl;dr: Oh, they're very dead, and we'll make an example of them.

EDIT AN:

Knowing our track record, we won't punish them at all and instead ask them if they want any of our goods or services. If they're confused, we'll be honest and pragmatic about it - "If you fail, we make a lot of money, and if you succeed, it doesn't matter for any of us."

If you're a higher-up in a school and you restrict certain books from access to certain age groups or all age groups, you will not be inherently prosecuted. However, complaints are allowed to be made by students and parents in the district/of the school.
