I have no clue what any of those things are, but seeing as this thread has been dead for the past hour I guess I will post something. Those items would only be illegal if they harmed others just by existing, and in that case, would be confiscated.

we do about everything. Either way, attempting to commit suicide is not exactly a crime in the traditional sense, but it is illegal, meaning that if you attempt to commit suicide you may be placed in one of various programs used to ensure those at-risk of suicide wellness checks. This may include a period spent in a mental ward for low- to medium-severity mental cases, your stay ranging from a week to as long as several months if you do not improve enough to be let into the world and trusted to a degree to not immediately self-harm.

Bullying someone to suicide through non-physical means.

felony (malicious) assault in wanton disregard for human life and safety resulting in homicide. -- anywhere 10 to 20 years hard labor, and/or life in a penitentiary for the criminally insane; or death penalty. If deception or coercion in the creation of, or the fostering of mental anguish of a person with diminished mental capacity is involved, the perpetrator publicly caned and then executed.

Playing two criminal organizations of about 200 people in total against each other so that they each wipe the other out in a grand battle royal (lots of property damage but nobody uninvolved is hurt)?

You basically started a civil war within the Merryman.
Congratulations. Now hopefully either one of the 100-man sides is going to split from the main Merryman organisation and become its' own minor separatist gang. Overall, your punishment is $1 million worth in Merrycoin for all the ticket sales and maybe being stabbed by a relative of someone who got killed in the battle.

Being caught in bed with YL's wife/husband and getting him/her pregnant in the process?

If it was a mutual combat, there's no penalty per se for that sans disturbance of the peace. Otherwise, it'd be six months' probation and a month in jail for the first offense, graduating to a year on a second offense within ten years.

It is not a crime per se. It all depends on what exactly the person is doing, as "disturbing the peace" is a very vague term. The guy can be yelling at another guy in the middle of the street, or arguing on the phone inside a bus, is it annoying? Yes. Is it a crime? No. Now if he is yelling or honking in front of a hospital, or in a residential area after 10:00pm, then he will have problems with the local police department...

Depends on whether you killed someone. If it was non-fatal, maximum 10 years in prison.

If you killed someone, maximum 20 years, and if it was more than one person, exile for time period to be determined.

Technically legal if it's on private property owned by the person who is intoxicated or the property of a possible bar where they got intoxicated. Anywhere else is illegal.

While there are no written rules about something like this happening, the person who caused it will probably be in custody permanently by the DSIB.
