Central planning is rampant, with structural expressionism being the latest 25 year-late fad that has interested the state architects. Modern-looking towers of glass, metal, and concrete are dotted interstitially throughout blocks upon blocks of Plattenbau-like slums like shiny thumbtacks in a pile of old buttons, everyday a reminder of the stagnating economy and the growing disparity between party members.

They have a thriving, sprawling, and relatively modern megacity, much of the nation's funds are directed at it much to the very detriment of those in the periphery.
