I don't even know my own countries national anthem....Because I really don't care. I know everyone is like "You should know your own countries national anthem!", but I just really don't care.

I also really don't care about the "I pledge my allegiance to the flag" thing you used to have to say at school (never went to school), but don't anymore and I don't see why you should have to either. Some people I know think you should have to, but I don't agree with it.

This is in the United States, by the way (not sure where you are from)

Yeah, I'm British and, for some strange reason, pretty damn proud of it, but God Save the Queen is such a bloody boring tune, seriously. I Vow to Thee, My Country is much better.

For some reason I was thinking you were British. Maybe I saw where you were from on Last.fm

I'm not particularly proud to be American, but not particularly upset, either. Being proud to be a part of my country isn't really something I think about, so. I just think of the current state of my country more
