It has become very apparant to me that he values progress and accountability, and any reasonable leader would agree that these are two attitudes that will often propel a nation to grand trajectories. "Most people on here would hate her for being ex-pornstar, but I'd be a hypocrite for hating on her for her past."

Though, I'm wondering. How did she managed to ascend in the corporate world? Bah, whatever. I find her political stances to be garbage. Laissez-faire and democracy are only compatible in an agrarian society. Once society industrializes, laissez-faire economics in a democratic system only means corporate rule and corruption. I also think essential utilities should be municipal-owned as a public service. Putting the hands of essential parts of the economy in private hands only leads to them controlling society indirectly. I do commend her stance on gun rights, though I don't think it goes far enough. Still, her preservation of welfare is dumb. The welfare state is precisely the issue with the social democratic system that she seeks to destroy. I also doubt the ability of Asiatic peoples to maintain democracy.

Essentially, she embodies all the faults of libertarianism, the ideals that led America to decay and rot. I honestly see a Maoist revolution happening in her state within a few decades."

The city's infrastructure is crumbling under its own weight and kinship is snuffed by the paranoia of totalitarianism. "We are surprised that Sing still holds democratic principles after seeing the system subverted so easily by his predecessor and even helping in keeping him in power in performing 'crowd control' at those riots. We'd consider him a fool for that alone, but in privatizing those state owned industries he has given away the power to hold back services to rebellious provinces if the situation ever did occur. We do see him keeping his military prepared for conflict which is nice, but that does not away our opinion. He is a fool...

As for Akira she seems more competent and aware seeing as she saw what was happening to her republic and tried to stop it, but as with her superior, she still believes in the system. Perhaps organics don't get to live long enough to see the amount of democracies subverted that we have. For her policy making she seems to be trying to prevent more corruption which is inherent in her republican system. We do like that she made high school a part of the national curriculum, but it's troubling that it took so long for someone to do that for Stanier. Our opinion of her is also negative and to be honest looking at these two makes us worry about the long term sustainability of their nation before it again falls to someone who will subvert their democracy."

"The vast majority of what I've heard about Adalbert's life - both his good deeds for the disadvantaged and less fortunate during his time as a doctor, and many of his policies as a national leader - lead me to believe he is a man of benevolence and moral strength at heart. He clearly holds in genuine high regard the inherent equality of his people and their right to a universal standard of living, not to mention the unforgettable importance of his nation's environmental well-being. It disheartens me, then, to learn of his apparent distaste for those who hail from other cultures and nationalities. Adalbert's desire to keep his nation's culture intact is understandable, and I imagine it is a desire all people share to a certain degree. Certainly, there are ways to ensure the peaceable integration of foreign citizens into any nation's home culture, without forcibly robbing them of their identities or discriminating against them as a group. Whatever problems, if any, may have arisen from foreign migration to his nation, it is essential to understand that all of us on this planet are still human beings with inviolable rights, and despite our many substantial and serious differences, we are, on the deepest level, fundamentally the same. I hope Adalbert will be able to keep that in mind as he considers which policies to implement with regards to these people."

- The Ultimate Supreme Leader: Kokichi Oma

"JonTron, I need all your stocks of flex tape! I need it to fix the leak in my lockbox! Get Phill here if you can't do it yourself. ManBearPigs a commin'!... Would you accept my invention, the dial-up modem as payment for the flex?"
- The Vice President and Super Cereal Presidential Candidate: Al Gore

BN: Pick anyone, or both. I don't really mind.
