Technically, not illegal. But it's also not illegal to kill someone if they force you ingest a gallon of soft drinks. Since people can be cloned, dispute resolution will ensue, and the likely result of that would be exile from the Disorder. The anarchic whackjobs do not have a favorable opinion of being forced to do things.

Depends on the motive

If it was a planned attack, Prison until Parole

If it was an unplanned attack or an accident, it would be 5 or 1 years respectively, both with the possibility of parole.

Additionally, it would be shorter if no one was actually harmed- 10 year for planned, 1 for unplanned, and a mere 100-1000 vloe fine for accidental.

Depends on the content.

If the mature content in question has to do with the military, no punishment; in fact, this is encouraged both to increase support for Garmageddon's large military and to "expose kids to the harsh realities of life".

This crime could be categorised into various sections of the penal code and could reach up to 12 years in prison if the act was on purpose.

Depends on the type of drugs

While Trivega has fairly lax drug laws, i'll assume they planted one of the ones that is mostly illegal.

In this case, the officer would serve the crime for possession of illegal drugs (5 years) as well as any length of time their victim(s) may have spent wrongly incarcerated if that was the case.

If they did it repeatedly, they would likely be psycho-analyzed and potentially sent to a mental hospital instead.

Intentionally messing up the environment just for kicks?
