If the money is returned to it's original owner, no punishments will be necessary for the thievery, but you may receive community service equivalent to the amount of time the thief was enslaved, depending on the conditions. If you attempt to keep the money for yourself, you will be given a fine equivalent to the amount taken plus a percentage of your income.

If on a combat deployment, this incident is simply a non-issue—if anything, running over enemy civilians is a good thing, but not encouraged due to inefficiency. If on a non-combat deployment, such as garrison duty in an overseas base, the military personnel will be handed over to local authorities; in case of a lack of said local authorities, sent home with a light warning.
