"Well, I, General Onox, shall judge this Odessa!!!
Well... This Woma- Wait. It is a man? Why does he look like a woman!? Seriously. That is confusing! This Shadow Heats Nil-One has some seriously questionable taste indeed.
Anyhow, he reminds me, General Onox, of my trusted Lieutenant General Vire, with him doing the backroom business and stuff I, General Onox, have neither the patience nor intrigue for. Still, just like his Master, that Hellion Guy, they look extremely evil but seem to be so called Good Guys that champion some weird form of Government. And I, General Onox, am not sure what to think about that. It is extremely confusing!
Otherwise there isn't much to say about 'em, as their factbook rather plain."

Your story is as interesting as it's honorable- going so far to serve your people and your nation is certainly a meritable thing few would dare to do in this time. Now about your policies the similarities between us are striking, however, we, as usual, are not without differences- for some reason you oppose conscription! But if not for the military, who will blend in the minds of the young, give them a "finishing touch"? I can, however understand the reasoning for such a decision for your nation is so techno'logically advanced it does not has to rely on numerical supremacy in order to emerge victorious in the battle... Odessa's Status: Conspiring against the Empire.

"So the Fleet Commander is both their name and their title, how interesting. I haven't seen a culture that functions that way regarding their leadership. I do ponder the reason why that is. It is because it serves as immortalization of the leader, and therefore making any attempts on their life moot as they will always be the Fleet Commander. Even if the previous vassal is dead, and ensure that morale remains high? Or something else entirely? Nevertheless, the Commander's pacifism is rather disappointing. They could have played an important role in my schemes to undermine the Empire's goals of total domination. But that is their determination, and it is not for the Federation to intervene. Her children were rough, not as rough as those who experienced living under the Empire had, but still rough regardless. She has my admiration for being able to survive the crash, and the beasts they dwell within her lands, and return home, and rise to become the Fleet Commander.

Hm, this begs a curiosity, would the Fleet Commander be willing to take an envoy from the Federation to study their customs and military traditions and technology? Or would that stand too much as aligning with a nation in conflict? Overall, I bid her well in her rulership, and may as the Gods serve her well. ”

"I have to be honest, I feel a great sense of respect for Anšar. His childhood was rough, to say the least. He apparently also used to be in a small gang until he was convinced to leave in order to serve in a temple of his god. Although I am not religious myself I would be lying if I said that wasn't commendable, turning his life around like that.

Not to mention he is a veteran too. Fighting for one's nation is probably among the noblest things a person can do. Anšar has proven himself to be a worthy and honorable soldier, although some of his methods are admittedly a bit too brutal, if you ask me. Still, I don't think Anšar is an evil man. When it comes to his political career I can certainly say that the things he stands for are pretty much things I myself agree with. Even if some of the methods he used weren't exactly 'moral', one could argue that these were simply necessary evils for the greater good of his nation. His dedication of protecting the civil liberties of his citizens, his fight against corruption and the fact he increased the military budget for the sake of protecting his republic has pretty much cemented him as a capable leader in my eyes.

That's all."

He is correct in that the President must be a representative of the people and the nation's will - though I can acutely disagree with his statement that the President is not a leader, but I came to make a statement on policies and not slogans. Combating corruption, social housing, welfare - these are all good policies - but they are undermined by his militaristic beliefs. I can say first hand, as can most Germans, that encouraging the youth to pursue enlistment in the military will only end in disaster: either by pointless and fatal warfare; or by a simple waste of resources better spent elsewhere. Plus, for someone who claims to be a patriot and a nationalist - and therefore presumably supports the sovereignty of his nation - there is far too much of a willingness to follow the paths set by other states. In short: there is some to like, a lot to oppose." Reichspräsident und Prinzessin Victoria Louise Brandenburg

(whew) Young enough to see your life flash before your eyes at age two in the form of a nuclear blast? That's bleak, even for abandoned orphan standards, but at least she had good people around her who were willing to raise her right, or er, at least raise her in general. If childhood resilience is any indication, Alexandria can obviously handle herself with relative autonomy, but I still sympathize with the restrictions she faced as a kid. Tiger parents, am I right? Ha, ha... (pauses) er... ha."

"Tough as a two dollar steak. That's a good way of putting it. The combat decorations are pretty cool too as far as participation awards go. I don't want to sound harsh, but saving your own ass in a car crash? Is that really grounds for a gold star, whether its enemy property or not? I didn't realize the military had their own consolation ladders for sheer ineptitude... In any case, bravo to her for accepting her own sexuality at the time, that's very brave. If you ask me, I couldn't care less about her impromptu commandeering of the helm, so to speak. She's a camouflage-clad carbon copy of her mother's own crackpot platform, and so I doubt this flowery tyrant will steer the ol' rusty barge any better than her predecessor."

And yet, you are a personification of one of the most malignant forces that plague the United States and its rivals: Warhawkery. You can make the speeches, you can send soldiers to God, you can do that all you want, but that does not change the hypocrisy of the situation. You remind me of Dubya. Loud and proud, patriotic, always talking about his 'freedoms', and yet restricting both the freedom of his own people and those of other nations. You know what happened to Dubya, he got away with it, but thousands of Americans died. And he has the privilege of being apart of a nation that doesn't exist in a perpetual state of authoritarianism. You know what happens to Authoritarian leaders when their people decide enough is enough? Well... I'm sure whatever afterlife you believe in will give you plenty of time to talk to Romans about what went wrong.

You're probably not going to pay attention to an old sailor who leads a country about the same size as Tuvalu. And I am not going to try to stop you, no threats of war, violence, or otherwise on my end. Not like it'd matter. The political part only really applies to the earlier parts of his lives. Anyway, like I was saying: Inogo seems a bit too keen to use violence to solve conflicts, based on the fact he has been involved in multiple fist-fights in parliament. I won't be bothering with bringing up civilisation and such, even though I'd like to. However, based on this behavior, combined with some of the comments he made towards certain people, he comes across to me as someone with short temper. It seems like Estima sometimes lets emotions get the better of him and that can be dangerous. I will warn him and note that if doesn't find a way to control his own emotions, it may have dire consequences for Sherechia and her people."

Ditched my old signature. Will be making a pretty looking one when I find the time.

"Inogo Estima is quite the... individual. Frankly, when it comes to things like social issues and how to run a government, I feel like there is a lot we can agree on to be honest. Such as his beliefs in democracy and free speech, his anti-corruption acts and his attempts to improve the education system. And honestly I am a big fan of the lack of gun laws. Hell, even though he's a socialist, there are still things we can have common ground on when it comes to economic issues. As far as I am concerned neither of us like the big corporations or billionaires that much, to put it lightly and the mixed market system he has implemented is honestly somewhat agreeable.

My real gripe with Chairman Estima, however, is the fact that he seems a bit too willing to use political vio- actually, scratch that. "A number of details stand out to me here. First, what kind of government gives their head of government a university title¹? Did you think nobody would notice? Second... okay, that is quite a strange political system you've got there. I don't know how well it would work; never been done before. Maybe it would work. Maybe not. You're entering uncharted waters there. Still, the idea of a leader who sees himself as a servant of the people, I'll admit that's pretty refreshing. However, your policies worry me. Your 'corruption eradication' is just another name for double jeopardy², which would be an awful thing to have on the books. There's many things in here as well that make me seriously question your mental state. I'm no psychologist, but I worry about the mental health of anyone trying to reach the Dark Tapestry³, let alone colonize it. All in all... I genuinely worry about this man, Lars Alexanders. He needs help."
