The victim can press charges for Intentional/Targeted Harassment, unless government records say otherwise (victim failed to notify government on gender/name change). In that case, it's an issue for their boss or HR Department.

The carrying of weapons is already prohibited, then the use is worse, and life imprisonment if there is a death.

Beating a homeless person

this is automatically a hate crime, unless of course, the homeless person throws the first punch and wasn't provoked in any way into doing so. not that there isn't so much free housing nolo gap, because anyone can build more then one shelter for anyone to make their own home, that there really isn't a lot of homelessness as such.

beatings are considered a form of rape, and carry the same severity of punishment, usually extended durance vile.
but every law that affects a person directly is a local law, by the consensus of each village or district.

so there is no one simple answer absolutely, but the highest probability is a serious world of hurt.
localities have the option of using exile in place of imprisonment.

There's no state religion so "heresy" is regarded as a freedom of speech and religion, and so not punished in anyway. (It's actually frequently rewarded in the private sector because all the talk show hosts want to talk to you.)

Spray-painting caricatures of prominent government officials on public property along with not-so flattering words about those same government officials.
