Money will convince you being held hostage in a mech was your idea all along.

I'd say several cliches would be the many commonalities found among players. A bunch are either edgy teenagers experimenting with political ideas, stacks upon stacks of introverts, some have really really close attachments to self-created fictional characters, others have Aspergers and other things throughout the spectrum, a bunch are strongly influenced by their online LGBT identity in creating content, many have mental issues, and according to one poll in NSG from a long time ago, the majority (claim to) have IQ substantially higher than the general population.

My headcanon is quite simple. People like this including me in some sectors especially in the past dominate NS, because if they don't have these, then they won't spend their time on NS. They'd (as of 2021, metaphorically) go outside instead 🇳🇸

Despite the occasional negativity including from myself, despite the clichés, and even despite being summerposted, I'm still glad and happy to be part of this niche medium-sized community. I have met so many wonderful people here, truth be told - regardless of the nations they run, most of you are very, very nice.

I'm pretty sure this has been said before, because I'm pretty sure that at this point every single cliché has already been said, but RPs that not really get updated that often, and yes I'm guilty of this, not even sugar-coating... ok maybe a little sugarcoating because I posted yesterday something on it, but that was like a week after the last post.

There are two types of nations. Nations that completely, 100% represent the user's OOC views, and nations that completely, 100% don't. Where are the nations where some parts are based off of the user's political views and some aren't?

I'm not a fan of Christian Theocracies, but I like the idea of unifying enough to pool resources - but not to a point cultural and national identity is erased.

Oh, another cliché that pretty much applies to me: retconning. I sometimes get ideas to change my lore a bit. Case in point, my history. It used to be about a green Antarctica, but I dropped in favor of another weird alternate history involving the cold war going nuclear in the 80s, and the post-war world involving some sort of rivalry between the European Union and the Soviet Union.

I'm somewhere in this, and I take that as a great compliment since 2017. Good times back then. I loved the reactions I got from people. Not as edgy as I was, but I was the purest Edgelord on the site. Now that title belongs to Khoronozon, Imperial Yona, and Kyoki Choduki.

And another thing, I loved and appreciated the people I met back then. I remember all of them. Thanks to me keeping a list of all the players I enjoyed being around. I hope they return someday. How I would love roleplaying with them or just having chat, either way. I'll be happy.
