"Inogo Estima is a perfect example of a leader that you do NOT see every day. I see he has multiple personalities, including his rudeness yet at times of crisis this man is calm. This doesn't come with the fact he is a skilled driver, which made me believe he is good with cars. What I'm not to big of a fan of is his extreme views of democracy. I understand that he wants the people to be free, but that should mean he should abolish the cruel and unusual punishments implemented for death penalty. They do not go together in a society. Despite all that, you seem to do a great job at stabilizing your nation, and I do congratulate you for that. Very well done.

The Bureaucratic Artificial Intelligence

<Okay, so who do we have here... Yunru [REDACTED]. Don't know why its [REDACTED]. Maybe its a dirty word but oh well. What does her files have to say. So she's from an alternate 1980s where Einstein build a time-machine to kill Hitler, causing the Soviets to start WW2, and then later WW3, which then led to a psychic called Yuri taking control of some armies with his abilities, and started with conquering the world. So she and some other people decided to cross Siberia all the way to Alaska. I have to say, she's very brave, lets hope the trek didn't make her mentally unstable and paranoid. Lets read further.

So, in Alaska she deployed a thing, that thing apparently can plop buildings out of the ground? No idea how that works, but I'm intrigued... I would like to have one of those but anyway. Lets read further. Aahh, I also read that she's very smart, and that her teachers had to give her extra work so she doesn't fall asleep in class. I'm impressed. Lets read further.

Oh no... is he alright. I mean, she does seem like she needs some help. The problem is that I don't think you can find much help in the frozen wasteland of Alaska when most of the world has been conquered by a powerful psychic. Are the people around her alright... I mean, a paranoid like Yunru would probably order a lot of purges. Her upper command must be inexperienced loyalists who don't know much about battle and would get purged anyway because Yunru's paranoia starts kicking in again.

What I overall will say is that it might be best if Yunru gets replaced with someone who is a bit more... mentally stable.>

"Interesting. A society that is entirely at the mercy and the governance of AI. This would not bold well in the Empire if such a proposal was made without ending in bloodshed, and the purge of anyone that shares the vision. For the Alkdorian is not a creature that is to be commanded, but the one that is to give those commands and for all those below it to obey without question or face termination. Nevertheless, I find BAI to be very interesting. I would greatly appreciate learning how it manages the governance of a vast star-spanning civilization in every molecular detail to be used to aid in making Imperial Bureaucracy more efficient than it already is. I believe my Emperor would approve of such an endeavor, if not, there are other ways to ensure such enlightening insights are not wasted. Overall, I approve of BAI."

"I genuinely feel bad for him. He is a capable leader but he really needs someone where he can express all of his emotional trauma to, which is impossible in a society that's notorious for being strict, conservative and views any sort of "weakness" as a taboo. Forgive me for promoting Sherechian tourism but I think he needs to have a vacation here, we aren't the most compassionate people either but we don't mind hearing someone's mental issues.

As a leader however, he has proven to be a great leader, charismatic man who knows that too much or too little economic freedom is a bad thing, knows that the locals know better than the central government so he decentralizes power, while his society is conservative and isolationist, it is free in some aspects, especially the freedom to smoke. Overall, good leader, not much to bash him on... and I probably shouldn't anyway considering his mental state."

"Ingo rules by his own ways, it is not my place nor any Alkdorian's right to argue against his ideological views no matter how much we may disagree with his standpoint. It has served the man well and has indeed proved the results that he sought to reach. Significantly so, yes, very much. His people can live in a society where public servants serve the people and not themselves, as that tragedy has played out too many times in history. In addition, his people can stand tall and proud as their infrastructure is emboldened, their defense strengthens, their standard of living more comfortable, and overall their economic prowess competitive and shielded to spare in the theater of the triumphant global economy to further enrich Ingo's people. Otherwise, I do not see any reason besides the method to oppose him. I congratulate him and wish him well."

I am still trying my best to overcome that, of course. The world is quite vast, you know? Hmm, that is enough about myself. So I have read about yourself. Quite a world you got there, I thought to myself. There are a lot of death and destruction, and you have signed up for your own army as soon as you are able. A world with someone as much as the leader of a terrorist being betrayed and changing sides to work for the enemy - such fluidity of loyalty, I thought to myself. I am indeed quite sad that you have been in several campaigns of violence - you are a smart woman, I do believe in that. However, the merciless elimination of the enemy, domination, all of it just do not sit well with me. Perhaps one day, your world will find peace, too. "Somehow, Ferrior manages to incarnate the oppression in one of it's purest forms, by ruling through fear and breaking people's spirits into submission. What he will never understand, is that once he is no more or even starts failing, his cult of personality will crumble. Slowly, but steadily. But who he will be, if fear in his people disappears? Like during our revolution, when at one point, our fear just either vanished or turned into fury, which still fuels us, when we fight. He will try to fight them, but one day, he'll be overthrown, and if not, his empire will crumble for it will be ravaged by internal strife. If there will be no revolt, then when he dies, there will be struggle between his highest subordinates and successor for power. Either way, his refusal to base his empire on the will of people will be his downfall."-Shawn Bjomson

Carl's Mood: Friendly

"Good heavens, what a colourful background. I never really took any anthropology classes, so I have to admit I'm a little lost when it comes to the technicals of Anšar's life. With that being said, it doesn't take an armchair social scientist to recognize that he's not the worst leader anyone could have hoped for. As far as I'm concerned, he's warm, approachable, and for the most part respectful, but I'd still be careful around this guy. Friendly isn't necessarily good, and he is fiercely independent. I'm not readily attuned to his professional stature, but I think being a team player who's willing to compromise even on the world stage is a necessary attribute for leadership these days, and I don't see why it should be any different in Anšar's case. Nevertheless, I'm very, very impressed with his proactive attitude towards corruption."

"It's true, taking the easy way out makes life, well, easier; but I can see that Anšar' recognizes the clear and undeniable importance of equitable opportunity. He truly values honesty, and I'm so happy to see it. Sure he might be a little too pious for my liking, but his dedication to transparent government exchanges that minimize conflicts of interest makes him alright if you ask me."

RESPONSE FROM THE CHAIRMAN

"Bjorson is an unrfinied brute, sure, but a surprisingly apt one. He has shown quite a prowess at avoiding political games and intrigues by virtue of being almost universally loved. Quite an accomplishment I must say. And even if he lacks a forral education, he knows that science is a force for good that must be supported. Hmm, I approve. Then we have his policy of reckless invasions to free the nations of the world. While I fully support this endeavour, let me say that I doubt Sky Reavers is capable of sustaining a period of continuous multi-front war, a reaction which will surely arise when the tyrants feel threatened. Overall, I quite like him, but a more level headed mind in that council of his should balance his recklessness.. "

Hmm, man of a few words, and morals. That is a little unfortunate on the morality part, but I can see where that is coming from, and I often like to look at positives of someone, anyway. You have... twin suns? I think you mean sons. Do pardon me for making such a grammatical correction, but you know, that really changed the meaning a lot, haha! Unless you really own a twin of Suns, then I suppose that is valid. You being ruthless against test subjects, again, is concerning, but as far as I am concerned regarding your dossier, you seem to be quite a... tolerable person. I am going to be neural for the time being, because people changes for the better, or for worse, and truth be told, I cannot evaluate fully with parts of your data missing.

Name is clickable, as always. It's a link!

"I see this man clearly. His mind is great as is his heart. He is just and kind, and when thrust into leadership he leads through these traits. Authority does not corrupt him. War does not corrupt him. He is good, and good is he."
