Ngl but most of Jamesian Republic's posts in this thread read like they're specifically talking about shit that they do/have done on this site lol.

No offense intended.

I was just wondering if I was the only person who did that or if it's just me. I'm sorry if I was acting self absorbed.

I mean Max (and NationStates as a whole) had already split from Jolt before they decided to shut NS2 down but yeah I get what you mean.

You had to fuckin pay to have custom flags.

I heard about that. Though I haven't seen anyone have flashbacks.

Now for a cliché that's not about me but I've born witness to: RPs descending into IC and OOC fights amongst each other.

These kinds of shenanigans alongside many RP threads in II being one-liner festivals are the things that repel me from actually trying to participate in RPs in that subforum. That, and the fact that I can never really find much of a reason for my nation to participate in them. But, I digress.

I remember participating in II RPs in my early days as a wee summoid. Bad writing, and very bad times were had. Mostly because people didn't mandate tech levels so we had people trying to fight an MT/PMT war and then some rando FT Galactic Empire LARPer would show up demanding everyone surrender to them/try to arbitrate by threatening to murder everyone.

Not a diché, but does anyone else remember Cybernations? NationStates' so-called 'rival' in the whole 'web-based political simulation game' from back in the day?

I remember it from trying to find a different political simulator that I remember playing one time like... 7 years ago. Actually, that search is what brought me here.

Yeah. I tried it out a few years back. It sucked ass. I stuck to NationStates. Much more user-friendly and a far better community. (Which...says something. Depending on the forum.)

I feel like a lot of people take RP way too seriously? Which is part of what's made me hesitant to try and do more than send a volunteer regiment to one dude one time? And even then I got hit with a "this is MT" even though that wasn't ever made clear?
