He is said to have a charming way of speaking while holding bad intentions. He purposefully makes anything confusing because he's paranoid about 'an enemy', which is not specified. He manipulates everyone into thinking what he's doing is good. I could go and on about how this man isn't the best person mentally speaking, but I think I've made my point clear enough. Twice."

"It seems, that right now the Paramount is fighting a war against greedy Sildorian assholes somewhere in the skies. Honestly, my opinion is mixed - while I don't like that clan, his clan's hatred for those called "organics" is also concerning, as it probably entails everything that is not made out of the materials he and his fellows are. That said, overall my opinion on him hasn't changed much - I both fear and respect his choice of weaponry, and the ardent paranoia to secure his life in case of assassination attempt, as paranoia isn't always bad. I like his iron-pawed ruler, especially the factor of him absorbing the minds of previous leaders - that seems to be his turning point, when he realized that he had to take over power away from the corrupt know-nothings which ruined his clan. I could draw parallels between that and my experience in BloodClan, as it was the place where I finally put the pieces of puzzle together, and realized that I had to return - the forest called, and I returned the favor. Now, maybe assimilation doesn't sound that bad - it would be only an extension of the proto-collectivism. Besides that, who doesn't love a good iron body?"
