While we are opposed to any legalisation of child sexual abuse, people are free to express vocal support for any political movement or objective, regardless of how fringe, immoral, or improbable it is, so long as lawbreaking is not advocated for. This is a technicality which extremist politicians rely on - it's not inciting murder if you specify that the killing should be perscribed by a judge and jury.

TL:DR: no punishment until something illegal (such as child sexual abuse) happens.

Not really a felony per se. Unless it was done intentionally.

Typically that's a liability issue that's settled by insurance.

If it was intentional then the person may face permanent revocation of their drivers license and possible psychiatric inpatient treatment.

Crimes occuring in a church come under the jurisdiction of the church. Someone one did this at a very conservative independent evangelical church run by an ex-army major and was sentenced to scrub the church's floor with their tooth brush.

Impossible. Corpses aren't buried in Orlesia. We have confidential processes for corpses. As we believe in science amongst all else. However, that being said, if someone were to break into a government facility and steal a corpse, they will be promptly imprisoned and executed in a black site.

Both fined 1000 Lordims. If it escalates too much\keeps happening then imprisonment for 1 year (but can be bailed).

Murdering their whole family, then setting their town on fire. Then driving their car into a police station but got out before it hit.
