And the fact that they actually believed their own bullshit made them even more terrifying.

In the early days, I used to run SR as an absolute monarchy that just didn't liberalise. And it was comically oppressive. I didn't justify it, I just went with the flow. And you know? It made little sense, wasn't very interesting, and generally was just a shitty plotline in retrospect. Look at OTL North Korea: they're primarily how they are due to a series of factors; a very chaotic foundation, a generally collectivist cultural ethos, Soviet/Chinese involvement in their politics, isolation from the rest of the world, a clique at the top who just won't budge, international sanctions, etc.

I'm probably not the best dude to be saying all this - the only personal justification I have so far for my own ebil dictator amounts to convoluted daddy issues - but at the end of the day there needs to be context. And sometimes, OBSCENELY repressive regimes (including those like in 1984, which was a shit book, fight me) just can't be justified nor reconciled with reality.

This also applies to colonial empires that somehow still exist in the 21st Century.

know what exactly you're looking for.

On my main of Wexas, I have 14- characters. Only 5 of them have an actual image because Google Images is terrible and Pinterest is barely any better. The amount of porn and Instagram posts I had to shift through to find Jerry's image alone is astounding. Now imagine me trying to find a decent image of a cowgirl on the internet. You'd be surprised how many shitty novels/porn sites there are dedicated to the theme of cowgirls. I just wanna find an image without stealing someone's face off of facebook/getting DEATED/being accused of being horny.

That's a problem with images in general to be honest, made endlessly worse when you find one you actually like and want to use but it ends up being someone's personal art project and then you don't use it because you'd feel bad stealing someone else's art for your NS shit.

Honestly at this point finding just about anything is difficult, let alone something good that is acceptable to use and doesn't make you feel like a dickhead for using it.

Honestly Kyoki Chudoku kind of embodies that whole dystopian ideal of absolutist oppression for rather dubious reasons. It's a nation run by an absolute tyrant imposing her will on the country for the heck of it, and then gradually coming to justify it in retrospect by obsessing over the importance of order and security. Kyoki Chudoku's factors in becoming an authoritarian dictatorship are really quite limited, to the point where I basically had to handwave the transition by involving mental inhibitors to explain why the population as a whole put up with any of this madness.

Honestly this is part of the reason Kyoki Chudoku Bunkatsu exists, because different Chudokuren personnel have vaguely more in-depth reasoning behind their own ideal governments but are kind of coerced into absolute loyalty to their Overlady. Hanabi completely embodies the idea of forceful subjugation by any means necessary, believing that absolute and untempered oppression is necessary to permit true order- and it also happens to let her do whatever she wants because she has a complete superiority complex and cannot accept being weaker than anyone else. Gikochinai doesn't care at all about tyranny or control, but she uses those means to try and force a world where everyone is happy by any means necessary because she loves everyone and can't bear to watch them all fight and be miserable. Naosu is a eugenic perfectionist who has a very particular idea of a perfect world, considering dissent a defect to be eliminated like a cancer from a healthy body- and all she has to work with are the remnants of traumatised veterans who in any other country would belong in the asylum. I feel like even if some of them are pretty shallow or undeveloped, the ideological goals of Chudokuren subordinates are a lot more varied and specific than the overall idea of Aozoratarianism, which itself is both IC and OOC really an excuse to justify the blatant sadism and dystopia that is on display and to try to make it seem like an actual ideology and not just the delusional whims of a psychopathic dictator.

Forced meme. This has never been the case even in Europe. Which is another NS cliché, because almost every nation on this site is either a stereotypical European 'nation-state' or a (largely homogenous anyway) 'empire' with very few other notions of what a sovereign state could be.

There is no real difference between the invention of the French nation and Soviet nationalism.
