"Now who do we have here? Chancellor Holten? Charmed I'm sure. What can I really say? He's a capable leader with a well rounded portfolio of life experience. His motives for entering politics on the other hand? (Laughs) I'm not convinced. I mean having to actually work hard to attend a prestigious post-secondary institution? Cry me a f*cking river. He obviously had the stones to enter the military of course, but I still find the whole 'two job blues' gimmick unbelievably funny. If you ask me, Holten is another forgettable career politician who's only bound to turn to corruption in a matter of time. So, it seems that this God-Emperor is quite the tyrant, almost ludicrously so. And apparently he's immortal, and has ruled for millennia. Right... Well, I certainly do not approve of his employment of slavery, his enforcement of an authoritarian caste system and his liberal usage of weapons of mass destructions. I'd formally condemn him, but I remain unconvinced that this isn't part of some elaborate prank."

"Despite his old age, this Gandhi is the human incarnation of the most vile and evil things. And he does not try to hide his villainy. Threatening wars and starting them, forging alliances and then destroying them, burning everything he sets his sights on to ashes and cinders until there is nothing left. This is a terrorist, not the "god" he would have others to view him as. It is futile to find any remarkable quality in Gandhi's null character."

"I want to say Herr Ngengi's heart is in the right place because of his reasons to bring about solidarity among the common people, solidarity on a global scale, but his philosophy is flawed. His foreign policy...it is all too flawed. I hate to be judgemental but this foreign policy, to "starve" the industries of the developed countries in the world, will create for him enemies with one of the largest and most developed nations. This is a policy of revenge, revenge against the countries who have wronged his people. If he allows himself to be guided by the need for revenge against the people who enslaved him, he will be standing on the same ground as did his oppressors."

Here we see her displaying happy-trigger-finger tendencies that would be completely out of place on any - and I do mean any leader del mondo civilizzato. I do not deride anyone because how young they are - that would be foolish of my part - but I do judge based on how they act. Given recent attitudes, and the fact that il dossier I was granted describes that she challenges citizens who disagree with her to fencing matches. That only reinforces my point about her being a child stuck on adult's body. Her politics are understandable, and her hardship is perhaps palpable - but the way she acts becomes nothing more than un insulto alla gente that has gone through either minor, or major hardship as well. ""We should dare to struggle, for to dare to struggle is to dare to win.' So goes one quote from a famous revolutionary nearly 100 years before our time, a quote which resonates deeply with me despite its age.

And you, Hegemon

Vasa, reflect the revolutionary spirit and ideals within that saying almost perfectly. Perhaps some may criticise for you being too rash, too hasty, to brave, too extreme. They will say you lacked planning or foresight, that you need more strategic ability and place too much faith in the capabilities of you and your compatriots. But they are wrong. History has shown us that those who wait to for the perfect moment to strike will always fail, while those who ready the situation so they may strike will definitely change the course of society. You are the latter, Hegemon. Unlike those who compromise and compromise until their revolutionary ideals are nothing more than minor reforms forward, or ones who wait under the apple tree for fruit to fall even as it rots, you understand what it means to fight, to leap, to rebel. And I admire you for that decisiveness.

At the same time, though, I must warn you against falling over to one extreme too quickly. Challenging all of hierarchy and religion while claiming free will is above all may be a step too far, even for those in your society. You must be careful to understand those conditions around you before committing yourself to great deviations."

The Statement on Hyeja

"At first glance she seems a bit confusing - she is a maoist, and thus a socialist, yeah. But, at the same time her title is "Empress", yet the nation she rules over is called "Socialist Republic of California"? Sure, it is a constitutional monarchy so that makes a bit more sense, but still... At first we were puzzled about a Korean becoming a leader of an American faction, but if she was born there then it makes sense. Anyways, take those things off from the table, and let's focus on the rest of the intel."

"She certainly had the advantage of being from a pre-war aristocrat family, but that jump from a minor commie cadre to a princess in mere 5 years is still an impressive feat - a lot more people need a more significant time for more modest political accomplishments. We also see that she majored in philosophy and East Asian history, and while we can surely encourage people to follow their passions, at the same time it is important to look at things which will get you money. And in this instance STEM seems like the thing that will bring better career opportunities. Don't get us wrong, it is good that you managed to maintain a good income and living, but perhaps IT or something would have provided you with more stable income in case of missteps? She seems pretty outgoing and keen on establishing relations with foreign countries, just like us. Trying to rule benevolently is pretty good, but benevolence not always is the best solution. We aren't entirely benevolent, but we aren't mustache twirling either - we are the mediocrity instead."

"As for her politics... Well, we stated before how a socialist monarchy is a confusing concept, and we are going to restate it there - socialists and monarchies usually mix just as well as water and oil does. Sure, there's the example of Communists ruling over Mongolia which had a monarch in 1920s, but even then this exception proved the rule. The rest of her pro stuff is nothing out of usual and pretty agreeable, save for the "Permanent revolution" - ugh, Trotskyists... Her tests showed her as a Marxist-Leninist, and all we can say is that we hope that the red specter shall never haunt post-USSR again. On a different note, we are not sure why it was worth listing the people's opinion on her personal idols as a things in "support/oppose" list - you could have like mentioned it in trivia or something."

"Hyeja's eating habits are - Well, at least she is going for the balanced diet with enough greens in form of kimchi. From one side, soda is not the best thing for your teeth or tastebuds, but from other side drinking such drinks is someone's personal choice, and something that is not worth regulating as it ain't alcoholism. We aren't particularly interested in her literature, but the bubble pop being her favorite genre is pretty ugh... not our personal favorite. Overall, this about sums it up."

Lemme just take a moment longer!

So yer a ruling council that holds majority in all stations of government within the Karakalpak Republic? A particularly powerful one I might add, bit on the decline though... apparently switching international relations in the world didn't help ya out to much did it? It's what ya get for putting all your eggs in one basket! banking also on people whom have moved out of your country to cling to some semblance of nostalgia to come back to rebuild the homeland is also a mixed bag in my opinion. Sometimes they get it, sometimes they don't.

So looking at some of yer pol- Gun Control.

THAS IT IM GETTING MY SPEAR."

All right, the typical sentences aside, I do find her to be quite a mixed bag when it comes to my opinion on her. She's... she's not too bad from her views - her hatred of fascism is totally welcome, but anti-pacifism? Maybe she is one of those militant pacifists, but then again she is also anti-militarism. What a strange combination, until you realise that she is a war profiteer, and that she has definitely killed a lot of people as a contractor of some sort. I am honestly not sure how to think of an obvious soldier of fortune. Good armor and abilities though, she could definitely reach up to me one day if we fought for some reason, or for a sparring practice.

"You can't just ask someone why they are tall."

"But but hooman is as tall as a building aaaaa. Also I heard they like cats UwU"

"Yeah sure."

"Ms. Valentijn is quite a hero of the new world, I must say. I like her "head-charge" tactics back in her military days as well. It's... uh... slightly relatable. Moreover, I cannot show enough respect for her determination to save the people of her world from the nuclear apocalypse as well as to rebuild the world and make it not only habitable, but also advanced and idealistic."

"Okay but if I get hit on the head with a nuclear missile, I won't just say it is "pretty painful". ■ _■"

It is 2075 and SS-AAA is Zitravgradian first "good" space colony, based on a planet called Crustalia, a planet with life 5-month away from Gaia, rife with an untapped resource which is pretty much bright blue Tiberium. Led by an ironhand military scientist and a depressed bureaucrat, the Pioneers are having much existential crisis.

The Statement on Fyodorovich

"Woah, there is a lot to read, we see. Where to even begin processing this... The bio alone has a dedication which seems that it was made by someone who got straight A's in all classes and excelled in Literature/English. So much info, that we could probably give three separate opinions based on all of it.

Anyways, enough with the filler-talk."

"Entering university at the age of 10? It is likely still a hard experience even for someone who is gifted and picks up things quickly. From one side, being pushed into this by your grandmother and losing the social life in process means, that it might not have always aligned with Fyodorovich's own interests. But from other side, would have he become as successful in military engineering and physics if he wasn't pushed? Anyways, it seems that he was annoying and has retained that edgy humor from his teenage years - for one, we are not surprised. Also, reading his intel seems like looking at the future in a some sort of weird time loop, and seeing the sad demise of the Kazimir and Feodora really brought the sadness for some of us, and we hope that the Fyodor bounced back relatively quickly from that. Being constantly tested for nepotism just because of his grandparent status and age sounds very annoying, especially if you are actually skilled enough and wouldn't have any issues with getting the position even if you weren't related to them. His military service surely has some impressive stories to tell, but that is something for a different day."

"On his health and personality - well, he indeed has got a lot of those traits from his grandfather. Him often being in a military attire is also good, as those are quite fashionable. That said, while a lot of his stats are pretty good, we would recommend him to perhaps dial stress back a bit and reduce overworking of yourself - those things in the long term will take away at least a few years from your life. But perhaps he wants to live his shorter live to the fullest, rather than living the last years of his long life as a frail man in retirement home. We don't really care about his bisexuality nor his complicated relationships, but his workaholicism is still greatly appreciated, and his mood swings are at least predictable. That said, we have a feeling that we would get sick from his edgy humor pretty quickly."

"Wrapping this up with his politics - He is a member of the same party his paternal grandfather was, and is also the same in terms of being a model member. He encompasses all those good things - militarism, science, social conservatism, and left-leaning economics. Hey, at least he doesn't have to use the mask to hide his iron-handed approach and can reign more freely, and unlike his grandfather he actually gives a damn for those who are "weaker" in society, because they still can be utilized in some way. Him being down to earth is good, but he really could either improve his diplomatic skills, or at least hire an advisor who is more competent at diplomacy to handle things for him. Overall, we are quite cordial towards Fyodorovich, but nothing more, as we aren't close in terms of proximity and our policies don't affect each other."
