I was raised and promoted to be musical. But for vocals I find its part natural talent and mostly practice makes perfect. Just wondering are you male or female? (Thinking about vocals that's why I ask)

So was I, really. My dad was in a band when he was a kid, he used to play electric and acoustic guitar, and he owns a lot of various records, and exotic instruments. I grew up on bands like Fantomas, Faith No More, Portishead, Sleepytime Gorilla Museum, Mr. Bungle, Secret Chiefs 3, Faun Fables, Eyvind Kang, all sorts of various things.

And I'm male.

Yeah. Mine unfortunately became rather popular locally, and unfortunately people want similar stuff from the new releases but that's not going to happen.

I've noticed people really don't like bands changing their styles around.

People STILL want Ulver to go back to black metal, like, 14 years after they've done anything black metal related whatsoever, or really metal in general.

Shitty rock radio station, where there's too much talk and not enough music. And most of the songs aren't even good.

Someone showed me them a while ago. Instantly became a favorite band of mine. Reminds me I need to put some of their albums on my "Top Priority to Buy When I Have Money" list.

Haven't listened to their black metal yet, though.

Earth-Song 6 (Chime)

Edit: Jesus, I do the weirdest typos.

Earth-Song 6 (Chime)

It was more folky black, though one raw, one pure folk and the other kinda and avant garde operatic black.
Worth listening to its good. My opinion is Ulver is like wine as it gets better with age.

Will do. I have one of those albums on my list of metal stuff to go through, but clearing out a ton of other stuff first.

Bad with names, but everything in the second half was awesome.
Edit: and the vocals on the first half was great as well. So its difficult to say favorites.
