Monkey 4047 died as an indirect result of the death of Monkey 4048. He served in the trenches during WWI, got trench foot and was invalidated home. There he caught his wife in bed with their next-door neighbour. There was a terrible fight and Monkey 4047 killed the neighbour. He was tried for murder but acquitted on the grounds of justifiable homicide. He refused to pay his legal bills and his lawyer had him killed by a relative of Monkey 4048, who was also a client.

Monkey 4037, after hours of struggling to do so, successfully pronounced Western Fardelshufflestein's name, but then he saw Southern Tzhelarhaai. Not wanting to continue his suffering, he decided to take "painkillers." As it turned out, the "painkillers" were actually disguised cyanide pills.

Monkey 4029 lived a long, fruitful life, filled with joy and laughter. He passed away peacefully in his sleep. He left behind a wife, three children, and five grandchildren.

During the investigation, the monkey detectives discovered that 4029 was actually poisoned by his jealous brother, who always resented his brother for his happiness. 4029's brother was charged with first degree murder, as well as possession of an illegal firearm. The monkey jury's verdict was unanimous; guilty. He served 30 years in monkey prison.

Monkey 4028, a convicted felon and 4029's brother, turned out to have been an experienced escape artist. While serving time in an island prison, he hatched an escape plan along with two other monkey inmates which would involve fleeing the prison via the nearby bay to the mainland. After carefully observing the flow of the currents, he and the other inmates were able to construct a makeshift raft, two paddles, and dummy heads to fool the prison guards. Later that night, they escaped the prison under the cover of darkness, attempted to flee using the makeshift raft, and were never heard from again.
