"I do not find her dogmatic rulership through a theocracy with herself as it's pope all that appealing. As a Christian I find this use of religion despicable, no priest should have his own nation and no king should be the head of a church. I must say her rulership, however, seems amicable for her citizenry, with the obvious problems excluded that is." - Protector Johannes-Paul of Antioch

'Why the fuck is America called the Jamesian Republic?

Well, for a supposed 'populist', he came from a line of bureaucrats and business executives. That and became unpopular. Like I know Americans at that time period liked fast food, but pipebombing someone's house over it, especially after the person was already going to be voted out? Now, that's ridiculous.

Even more weird, the Democratic Party somehow won New England. What the actual fuck?!

For the guy himself, he comes off as a 'Mr. Perfect' and frankly he looks boring. I mean, fuck, Jimmy Webster was a far better populist than this glorified bureaucrat!

"i believe i have already given my opinion on you a long time ago. like i said before, I definitely approve of your stance against the likes of anti-slavery, and i can "soft-of" agree with the anti-capitalism, but i would not rule it out entirely, it is something that just needs to be heavily regulated to prevent the likes of greed and corruption festering... anyway, as before, i am definitely curious about your obvious racism towards other humans of colour, and i have to wonder just how much of your bullied early life has contributed to such contempt towards them... either way, its not something i approve of in any way. you humans are already divided enough as it is, and that kind of attitude of which you hold will not contribute towards the unification and betterment of all... either way, i still hold neutrality until i have heard from you personally, whenever that may come."

"Ah, how timely. The line of jester-kings continues to propagate, despite all evolutionary odds. It must be said that there is comparatively little information on file with regards to his actual style of governance, at least in contrast to his predecessors - I doubt the apple falls far from the tree, but perhaps this one will turn out to be at least marginally competent. His civil war exploits are of mild interest, but ultimately fall down to a squabble between the cogs of an antiquated, self-destructive system; had his regime been felled in its infancy, I cannot pretend that I would shed a tear. I must admit, his decision to institute a senate was somewhat unexpected - while granting the public additional sway over the legislative process is commendable, the manner in which it has been executed is rather heavy-handed and exploitable. Still, it is a step in the right direction; were it not for the apparently inherited idiocy of his forefathers, I might have even left my opinion at a neutral-positive. As it stands, I reserve judgement until more information can be made available on the particularities of his rule itself - I see no point in commenting further on the life and times of such a young occupant of the seat of power."

 and I really love the color scheme that you are going for. I am also a fan of top of all that, I love your stance as a pacifist and appreciation of life. Life is too short (for the others, anyway) to bicker on politics, isn't it? We should all

 Would you like to go for a friendly spar sometime soon? I will most likely lose,

There is definitely a lot about you than on the surface, but I don't think I am allowed to say it here, lest your guys suddenly swarmed me for leaking out classified info. I do share the dislike for seafood just like you, and yes, I like to dress up fancy! Too bad not a lot of people can see me other than in my armour for the most parts. "It is interesting that a man who inherited his position feels himself qualified to speak on who would make the better leader. You may have had a fine education, but all I see in you is a man who believes that leadership is merely an apparatus of control. You expend great amounts of effort in maintaining your control, and not actually looking to improve the lot of your people. You cannot even relate to their needs, expecting them to conform to you. You would not have risen among our people with such an attitude, as one is entitled only to that which has been earned. You have earned only a precious little, and what you have earned speaks against you more than it does in your favor." - Cala Vermuth Iron Tiger

OPINION OF EXARCH SERA

This Exarch Sera...where do I begin?

She promotes science, something that I definitely like, but that's about where the positive aspects end. Her nature as an unkillable, undamageable cosmic entity smells like propaganda, and it reminds me of that one awful fanfic written by Betsy back during high school. Hear that, Betsy? Your writing is terrible, and you should feel terrible about it! No wonder you dated ball-loving Richie instead of me! But, of course, this is real life, so it's baffling how beings like Sera came to exist.

Regardless, everything can be destroyed, you just need the right tool. Normally I would tell my scientists to go capture her for experimentation, but her ability to replicate knowledge would complicate matters. It's overpowered, dear Lord above, please nerf it.

Also, her short temper makes her unfit for leadership, and if anyone here brings up my short temper, I will personally throw them out the airlock.

All in all, my opinion of her leans on negative.
