The officers would remind the filmer that until tried by a court of law the person being arrested is presumed innocent.

Being unofficially killed in a brawl by members of the quite confident KV.

Plotting to kill the head of state?

The revolutionary guards do it all the time! Tho it depends really. Like books of the occult, not only is that "legal", there's a full blown state campaign to completely stamp out their ideological works and influence in society as a whole. Now burning scriptures adhered by indigenous people would be regarded as a form of chauvinism/social intolerance, and can land you a year in re-education labor

Edit: Ninja'd

Ranges from 10 years to execution, depending on how far reaching the fire is. We don't tolerate anyone trying to burn OUR forests down (they're necessary for our guerilla resistance against the invading powers)

Would depend on where it happened. Attempting this in one of Aaaaaa's larger towns, like Gn'Yvaso or Moelle would likely net you a good 20 years or so (this would, of course, also depend on your economic status, as Aaaaaa's legal system is infamously corrupt). Successfully detonating the bomb, and how many lives it would end, would also drastically extend your sentence. Of course, this is only what would happen in Aaaaaa's more urban areas. Trying this in a small town in central Aaaaaa, where there is far less bureaucracy, would quickly land you the death sentence or life. In South Aaaaaa, you would almost certainly be given a public execution via hanging.

Child abduction?

AAN:

That'll net an "abduction of non independent individual" charge for sure, which equals 20 years in prison, and can easy catch you a "manipulating non-independent individual" charge as well, which is 5 years in prison. If you used rough force the kidnap the child, that could get you charged with "violent movement of person", which is normally only a month in prison, but the context makes it add on a whole 10 years in prison. You could get "violence against child" as well if you beat the child, which would add another 10 years to your sentencing.

Ninja'd edit for AN:
None, it's perfectly legal.

Giving a child a gender transition without their parents' knowledge.

It is generally not a crime in Merulla not to report criminal activity, although it is strongly recommended that you do so.
However, failing to report to the authorities any risk of public threat that could affect the community can be seen as a crime of omission to help the community, depending on the judge who takes the case.
Now if you are referring to someone who is also planning this insurrection, the sentence could be life imprisonment or the death penalty.

Police in Aaaaaa are pretty lax when it comes to drinking and driving - likely because they do it themselves. When Aaaaaa released its police forces into the private sector, driving under the influence wasn't even a felony under the new constitution. Only three years later in 2015 was it officially deemed illegal to drink and drive. Today, police in Aaaaaa will subject you to a breathalyzer test (not with your consent, if you refuse to test you will be immediately placed under arrest). Having a relatively small amount over the legal limit would likely just result in you having a warning on your record. Having five times over the limit, though, would almost certainly result in your arrest. Jail time, if any, would only be a month or so. Minor offenses like these can be bailed out though, and a bail for an offense like this wouldn't be particularly high.

Refusing to let police enter your home?
