Waldemar Rochester

"Ah, let's see here... ah, we have Prince Rails? That's an interesting name. Well, let's see here. He's a simple person, and also quite young for a leader. I can tell he has multiple hobbies, like being a fisherman, and he seems to be quite good at doing it, as well as swimming. I remember some of my siblings doing these hobbies, although I wasn't really into it. Then, there was how he got into power, which seems to me is a peaceful takeover. I do support his attempted stabilization of the Domain, and what the 'good news' seemed to come out of it as well, with some realm being restored and the forces of evil his country has were destroyed or something. So, why doesn't he consider himself good for the job? So far, he has already proven himself a great leader for his country, and I think he can oversee a period of peace and prosperity in his country after that crisis his countrymen experienced. I do believe he can move his country towards the right path with enough valor and confidence within him."

Such a bland and uninspiring character Mr. Rochester is; a supreme leader with unrestrained power who presents himself as a common conservative politician in any liberal democracy. No flair, no style, no aesthetic - if you're going to rule with an iron fist then you need an empowering image and unfortunately Mr. Rochester prefers drab and dull to grandiose and ambitious. Even his ascent to power is a boring affair marked by what is perhaps the least interesting love affair I've ever had the misfortune of hearing about. You sadden me, Waldemar. You could be so much more yet you choose to stifle yourself. Of all the supreme leaders—a collection of wicked and dastardly souls for certain—that I've ever had the pleasure of meeting, you are without doubt the least interesting."

It is an utter disappointment and one that won't be amended as you are built to lack doing so. Such power, such ferocity, all for destruction and twisted pleasures experienced by an empty being. It would serve better, if one was to put the wasted potential that your beings to better use, to be enslaved, deprived of thought, or of a brain, that you aren't even using, and be made tools to build, not destruction, there is so few beauties can be achieved through annihilation of others."

"I don't think, we gonna be the best pals ever, but it's entirely possible for me and Mercer to cooperate whenever it's possible. Despite that cynicism, he won't cheat outright. After all, he's got reputation to manage and such, but still, if he makes an offer, I am gonna negotiate carefully and watch for small details, cuz he is a chessmaster. Someone, who thinks further than several steps and definitely has plans for many ways of development. He proved that by staging and winning a civil war against Ryan... on Ryan's territory, inside that domed underwater realm. He is a master of manipulation, but manipulation and intrigue chess are for more than one player..."

Ideology wise, we have a range of disagreements, but he and his goals are not entirely malicious. Yet the methods are rather cruel and unscrupulous at times. I already stated my disapproval for this approach, so there is no need to repeat myself. I'd rather have some more booze and weed. Which I am gonna do soon. But not so fast... I'll also tell, that perhaps, our ideological differences are influenced by culture and experiences. He saw the charlie-foxtrot created by Ryan's ideas of ancapistan and decided, that order is necessary. Meanwhile, our people have been oppressed severely by a regime, that was tailored by an unknown power to destroy our culture and kill 90% of us, while the remaining 10% would be servants for some rich pricks, who would live on our lands after cleaning... So we spurned the authoritarianism and social conservatism. And when we find those, who staged our oppression... the revenge is gonna be oh so sweet! No military power is gonna save them from the great trial.

Perhaps, Mercer might have a few pointers? If he has, I don't know, what he will want for them though, and I feel, this is gonna be a deal with the devil, we should carefully consider. Besides, how the hell we gonna know, that these are the correct pointers and he doesn't want to destroy some power with our hands? Or that he got better a deal from these bastards and will lead us into a trap?" -Overboss Liam Navarro

"I have never been particularly fond of anarchism. Its idealistic obsession with absolute always struck me as bizarre and quixotic, and the fact that it attempts to pass itself off as a genuinely revolutionary system, more revolutionary than socialism itself, is quite laughable."

"I'm afraid that what I can see of Mr. Navarro does little to improve my opinion of such. His education was certainly most unorthodox, and quite unsuited for actually preparing him with the skills needed for leadership. Not to mention the fact that he came to power through what was in essence a coup, defeating his predecessor in a duel orchestrated by what appears to be the real power behind the Sky Reavers. Not what I'd call the best method for selecting government officials. Frankly, I do not consider him suitable for any kind of leadership position whatsoever, given his complete and utter lack of any sort of real qualifications."

"He should've just stuck to his adventuring, well out of the way of the business of government. That said, given the nature of Sky Reaver society and the existence of this ruling council, I suspect he doesn't have to do much in the way of governing anyway. Probably for the best, but I'd still argue that he shouldn't hold even a largely ceremonial position. He is simply utterly unsuited to be even associated with political authority."

Amadeus Freidrich [on Yunru]: "While there are those paramilitary groups that I personally dont agree with, I must congratulate Yunru for her success in the successful gains in territory, but combine that with the paranoia, it feels more like a comeback of Stalin who, due to paranoia, killed many people in his fear of Trotsky assassinating him. There is also a hint of Maoism, from a 'revolution' that could be inspired from mao's little red book, which, historically through the Cultural Revolution, destroyed multiple cultural/historical artifacts. So, all in all, I would be very cautious with interacting with her."

Ok, so the next person I'm supposed to "judge" is you. You look normal enough, nothing too weird at first glance. Wait? "Born to an alcoholic father and crack addict mother?" How the hell didn't you end as a miscarriage. Your birth is pretty much a miracle. Then when you got older and went to school, you were bullied to the point of depression. Wow, that sounds like a really suck life. But at least you managed to throw a desk at one of them... wait? A desk was the nearest easiest item you could throw... Ok? Then the bully was expelled. Probably because the teachers and principal was scared that you would use your desk-throwing abilities on them

You then studied law and was planning to become a lawyer, but then decided to become a president because you realized that the child-abuse you went through was a more widespread problem in Ravensburg. Its always good to see someone trying to change something from the better. In 2017 you ran for president and got elected by 88%22%... hold on... wait a minute. $88 + 22 = 110$. Who were those extra 10% of the people voting?

From the rest of your bio, I see a lot of things referencing outdated memes. This might be a sign that the abuse you had endured as a child has stunted your emotional and mental development, which might give you some problems as president of a country. Stealing a blanket doesn't seem like a very mature thing to do for instance. Having things like memes, Karens and pineapple on pizza on your list of likes and dislikes also isn't a good thing if you want to be taken seriously as president. I think the best thing you can do now, is go see a therapist.

"You know, as a former military general, I am generally interested to hear stories about people who previously served in the armed forces, be it any branch. Nova, whom I suppose formerly served in the Air Force, is no exception. In fact, I'd say she's one of the more interesting, or perhaps complex, people I've heard about, from her humble background to her ascension as the leader. But I don't have a lot to say about her, and I also got mixed feelings about her at the same time.

Well, I find her service in the Air Force to be quite admirable, and her commitment to non-interventionism is something that I really like about her, because our country is non-interventionist as well. Unfortunately, those might be the only good things I could say about her. Nova's previous affiliation with the United States military, plus her supposed admiration to the country's ideals, is something we cannot and will not support, as we have an adversarial relationship with the United States. By doing this, the relationship between our governments would probably not be the best, unlike most other governments around the world.

Again, not a lot to say about her, but overall, I support some of the stuff she does as a leader and oppose other stuff she does. My opinions overall are quite mixed."

"I am a possible psychopath. You are definitely one. Did those serfs insult you in some way, that you would poison them out of spite? Judging from how you 'deal' with many that you do not tend to agree with I suspect the only insult they did to you was to not immediately worship you as their new god. I have always said that those who demand worship are the least qualified to receive it. I wonder if there is some kind of inferiority complex floating about in that spiteful morass that constitutes your mind, as you seem so keen on replacing every part of you that has any tangible value with an artificial shell. Nanomachines or not, the more you allow technology to dominate your being the more you show yourself to be a weakling. You demand fealty from others as if you feel it deserved, but the only way to deserve such fealty is to actually earn it. Conquest and coercion are not means to earn respect. It earns fear. Fear can substitute for respect only so long as others have something to lose. You would take everything from people right from the start, so your foes having nothing to lose is a baseline state. A recipe for disaster that is, but for you it would be a disaster well earned.

"And so they come to haunt my life again. Another of the shape-changers, persisting after all this time, all these worlds away...maybe I'm paranoid. Can you blame me? I don't like people that turn into someone else at will. Certainly not one who refuses to be scanned by conventional means. I don't even want to know what an arcanometer has to say about him. I'm not in the habit of leaving such security risks alive, but at least I don't have to endure any worthless sermons on the pointlessness of religion. I learned the futility of faith a long time ago and I don't need another dark reflection to keep the message straight.

The thing I hate most about proponents of freedom like him is how smug they are about it. They act as though the most idiotic of beliefs are some fundamental truth, and they twist their words to make the most ridiculous fiction seem almost reasonable. This Archivist carries the trappings of an enigma, but at heart his beliefs are nothing different to what a thousand democratic idiots have shouted out before. It's ironic, isn't it? People like him want people to think for themselves- but not in any way that contradicts what they believe. Maybe I'm wrong, maybe I'm just grasping at what parts of this abomination are comprehensible.

Maybe one day we'll meet. And I'm not looking forward to it. But of all the problems he can cause, there is one I don't have to fear. The last telepath who tried to peer into my mind was left shattered by it all. Goodness knows I am after everything. So if you ever come for me, try at your own risk. I might not be able to kill you, but there's nothing you can break in me that isn't already broken.

I shouldn't be saying that with pride, should I? But what the hell else do I have to be proud of? I need some stress relief..."

“Mmmmm... assume much, you do! I am secure enough in my beliefs that I will not take disagreement personally if it is well-reasoned. Also, I am no telepath. What I can do is closer to the use of what is known as an MRI. I heard rumors that Achaedus can do the same without touch, but I will believe that when I see it.” -Balmothere
