That's an interesting song I haven't heard in while so I'll listen to it now. But good heavens, lad, use 1080p. ☐

Celtic Frost-A Dying God Coming Into Human Flesh

I'm not actually listening to it on YouTube, and just posting it here, so I don't even pay attention to that.

Besides: My computer sucks so I don't think it appreciates 1080p

Celtic Frost-Os Abysmi vel Daath

I need to listen to this entire album

The interesting fact about this stuff is I liked these 2 songs way before I really got into metal, and a lot of the time didn't like metal back then because of the typical vocals and because at first things like Dub Trio bored me because it was too "noisy" or the metal feel just bored me, until I got the ability to check out more music better and started actually liking metal, like I slowly do with any questionable genre for me. Despite the fact my mom and dad were both metalheads, I somehow grew up preferring mellow types of music, though honestly looking back with liking things like Faith No More, Fantomas, and so on, I grew up on a pretty varied selection of music anyway.

I also liked some Isis my dad played which I think is even weirder.

If you like Celtic Frost and haven't heard this, give it a try. It is by the same singer.

Black Sabbath- Pariah

Gotta say, this new Black Sabbath album could have been better. It's not a bad album, by any means, but I was hoping for something slightly more reminiscent of Paranoid.

Burzum- Dunkelheit

Quite a good song. I used this to introduce my guitar instructor to black metal today, he said he liked it and he proceeded to teach me the main riff. I also told him about how Varg burnt down at least 4 churches, killed a guy, and served 17 years behind bars, during which he became a full-blown Nazi. His response to that was "Seems like the sort of guy who should still be in prison".

Megadeth- In My Darkest Hour

This song has one of my all-time favorite intros. It transitions so well from clean to heavy. The vocals on the song are awesome, the verse riff is one of my favorites, and, overall, this is one of my favorite Megadeth.

Also, the album cover for SFSGSW reminds me of Fallout, but that's probably just because of Set The World Afire.

Albums being too similar to older albums is never a good thing, though.

Pelican-Immutable Dusk

New Pelican song. As far as instrumental metal with post-rock influence bands go, I'm more looking forward to Russian Circle's new album, but Pelican is fairly good, too.

I wasn't expecting it to be exactly like Paranoid, and I wouldn't want that, but I was hoping it would sound slightly like it.

Metallica- The Shortest Straw

I remember when I first listened to this song, about a year ago. I was just getting into the world of metal, and Metallica was my gateway to this awesome world. I was listening to every single Metallica song I could find, and I initially overlooked this one as an average, not-too-great song (which surprises me, because it's a good song). Some of my favorite songs from my early listening days of Metallica were Creeping Death, Frayed Ends of Sanity, and their first song to feature a music video, One.

Matter of opinion. For example I love bands like Motörhead, Impaled Nazarene, Whitesnake etc for the fact that they sound almost same on every damn album/song they've ever done, but then again Destruction and Kreator are excellent even though they sound quite different, if not on every album, at least on every decade. If band sounds too different on every album I get impression that they don't know what they want to do.

Dream Theater- Pull Me Under

I'll admit, I really don't know too much of DT's stuff, but I'm trying to get into them, and from tabs I've seen, Petrucci is a god amongst guitarists. Of the few songs I know by them, this one really sticks out to me. The intro is another one of my favorites, and I like the chorus.

Good point. There's even bands I like with a similar sound on multiple albums. But for me, personally, it makes a band feel stale after a while if ALL their albums sound so similar to the last, and I lose interest. I like a band to evolve, even if only doing it in a subtle way. They can even have the same general sound and it works fine. For example: Jesu is mostly post-rock, post-metal, sludge metal, electronic, and shoegaze throughout the entire project but every album feels unique.

Then you got some Avant-Garde bands with completely different albums every time (Ulver) and it works, though.

My story about my interest in metal is kind of weird.

I've heard mix opinions on them. Some people love them but others think they are talented but find that they get on their nerves, too. Kinda like Dragonforce, or something, where they show talent but for a lot of people are just annoying. Like how I feel about them, pretty much. Especially since their video I saw made them feel like they all had a big ego about their playing abilities

Quite possibly my favorite track off of Reign in Blood, although Raining Blood and Angel of Death are up there, too.

I'd prefer he didn't go to prison because that would have been 17 more years of what ranks among the best black metal.

Meshuggah is one of my favorite new metal bands (new metal, not nu metal), mainly because they're not trying to recreate the 80's, and they're not trying to do what everyone else has already done- for once, a band is actually doing something new.
