"What an absolute joke of a monarch. Just smile and wave, right? Honestly, as much as this bucktoothed thot probably hates my guts, she's no more than just a figurehead. She lost the empire, and she's lost the respect of most here. The only thing she hasn't lost is her virginity, and trust me, she won't be seeing that anytime soon. Though, maybe she can use her homemade cooking skills to conjure up some poison for the Prime Minister, like I did back in the 80s with Diana. That should do it just fine."

Field Marshal Jacob Dalston Sullivan Kelvin "Az Alvilág Örök Fenyegetése" Jamilian Svi Donald Zobor Tres. Taylor Xavier Ryman Axel Simon Váradi Szőke Mészáros Barnabás András Krisztián looked at the man with such intensity, and such a look from behind his helmet. He has a double-barrel shotgun in his right hand, but he was not intent on using on Kal. After all, as far as he is concerned, he has no quarrel with the man, and in fact might perhaps even see him as a potential ally if things go to Hell... perhaps even literally. Giving a slight nod of approval, he slowly walked towards the man slowly, every step with such an intensity and vigor, but not enough to hint anger. "We should rethink on that Weapons of Mass Destruction viewpoint more," Jacob simply said, before leaving once again and holding the said shotgun with both hands. "When the worlds in chaos, you and I will be there to tear our enemies apart."

Anyways, from one side, his decision to quell those twolegs called "nobles" and "clergy" is pretty good, as it could be a good first step for abandoning his StarClan in the first place, but at the same time, passing down power to the child or relative of the previous ruler is not always a clever idea, because they might not have the good leader abilities which their predecessor had - for example, while my brother Orangefang is one of those I care about, I would never pass my title down to him, as I would rather prefer someone who has fought with me and proven themselves. When it comes to picking leader, an elective choosing is better,
