You do have a good point, it takes an effort to not make your characters drift towards you in one way or another. My earlier characters are all hot-blooded, cheerful, fire elementals. I didn't scrap them, I just turned them more into distinct characters by adding traits and hobbies and quirks and interests.

Tbh, I can relate to this one, since for my own roster of characters (monarchs), I kinda made them all distinctive in their own way themselves, with the earliest one, William V the militarist guy, to George V the pro-Canadian guy, Edward VII the pro-German guy, and so on..

See? You might think some early ideas you had were bad, but maybe they just need some rework to make them work.

I'm super late but YAS, I can attest to the characters not being scrapped. For those who read about The Sixty would know that they have went through A LOT of changes - some more than others.

And for others, I actually have to scrap the lore a bit, yes. But the character still remains in one way or another. I don't think I remember completely axing a character... Maybe apart from that time I had to rework on the Third Personification of Valentine Z (from a Neko to an actual Cat, because I personally didn't want to go into a rabbit hole of cat girls).

Rabbit hole? Don't you mean a kitty den? 🐾

Regardless, recycling a character isn't the same as scrapping one. I had a brooding, poetic character named Akane who appeared once in a thread by AHSCA, but then I reworked her into Mirage, the creepy but good lady with memory powers you may or may not have seen in a conflict we shared.

I'm personally just following the mindset of: You can be everything you want to be on the internet, so why be yourself? Be a non-entity and experience new perspectives by playing a role that is unlike yours.

But I think I should also post something that fits to the topic: People that post in things relating to their AN without actually having the thing necessary to be the BNs AN(No Characters, Signature, Etc.)

The strange thing for me here is that I came to NS for some nation RPing, yes, BUT I gravitated towards character RPs and development more often because for one, PG13, and because that's just my thing.

Fun fact: Clarissa was already a concept since 2014, a good year before Valentine Z came to be, let alone with Factbooks.

Another Fun Fact: The Sixty came to be because of my love for 60 as a number. There are technically 61 people in there but that was a later addition. I have a few others around in other nations, bumping up to 80, and then to 100-110 if I counted NS Sports characters.

If my favorite number is 420, there would be 420 characters.

60 is my favorite number because of Base 60. And because 60 is so divisible. If you have 60 of something, you can share it equally with 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 12, 15, 20, 30 people.

And it makes it easy for me to divide my characters evenly, of course! 🤪

Look at your factbook's title, my guy.

You're trying to publicly shame them for having different artistic tastes.

"Weebs of Shame"

Imagine shaming people for liking a certain art style.

no, i mean... why do you think it is a worthwhile critique to point out that someone uses a specific artstyle and then laugh, especially when in response to someone literally saying "there are more people pushing the same 'look how many weebz are on ns!!!!11!!!" narrative then there are actual people using anime art"? you're literally doing the exact negative thing that somac mentioned.

It wasn't meant to be a harassment, It was meant to be a joke sorry if the joke offended you, I didn't mean to take it that far it was meant to express the sheer amount of anime on the site, I know this

It was a poor joke that looked more like targeted harassment, of which I still believe there was some intent.

I still don't understand why you would even decide to make a factbook like that. Surely, you would've understood that it would be offensive, especially with your previous title of 'weebs of shame'...
