Do noobs still join this site and immediately claim to be some massive space empire with like 10 trillion people and a billion people in their army and they have like ultra space planet destroyers that will totally kill anyone who fights them?

I remember my first intergalactic empire: it was an interdimensional empire with a lot of "people" and a lot of soldiers powerful enough to defeat anyone. Also, the first version of the Remulian empire was a galactic power, so i'm glad to reduced the size and power of this version.

Both, but mainly just because I dislike TNO and think it's so boring and annoying, especially when every puts it on a high pedestal. Call me whatever, but these alt-his WW2 scenarios that just seem edgy just to be edgy are just really lame. That's why I'll still say Wolfenstein 2009 is better than Wolfenstein: The New Order (lol it even has TNO in the name)

I don't like the mod because it turns HOI4 into an interactive story clicking adventure but the writing is well-done and interesting from what I can tell. I don't see TNO as edgy. It's a rather depressing scenario in all seriousness but I guess the memes diluted that aura or something. Idk I only played like 2 hours of TNO before the clicking bored me.

Yeah, this. I like it as a story, and the excerpts are really nice and well-written, but it gets old as a game really fast- the game parts aren't about being a game anymore, they're about clicking from event to event. And the community doesn't help with making the story better at all, it just gets turned into "haha funi clock man and gamer himmler lol" and it just gets... old. The story is one of the better-made dystopias though, imo. It really has that "shit sucks and there's nothing you can do about it" feel without going into outright edgy territory and I'd use it as a tonal reference for my own dystopic stuff if I ever wrote it lol any day.

I may be biased in saying that I consider that Nazi Germany had no redeeming qualities whatsoever...but it's quite hard to distinguish writing edgy Nazis from realistic Nazis because reality was messed up as it is: it's quite hard to think of something worse than killing off all of European Jews and 60-100 million Slavs that was pretty much planned (and implemented in its early stages IRL through the Hunger Plan) IRL. And if such policies aren't cancelled hypothetically, it'd be hard to keep a full secret for long. And with that said, I find it hard to see the USA or the UK sitting by idly for so long, especially if they'd consider Germany a nuclear threat AFTER the MAUD Report and Manhattan Project. They'd definitely nuke Germany before the 60s if given sufficient pretext or scares.

P.S. Though I don't play HOI, a similar timeline was made in the Anglo-American-Nazi war web novel. And the sheer darkness of it is that it's...well...not entirely unbelievable. And writing about it is just so grim that, well, you'd get labelled as edgy rather quickly. There's a reason why the Solar Remnant is basically on pause.

See, I don't know.

I guess you could just say that I dislike TNO because it's mainstream for mods for HOI4 and the community just really annoys me.

'I hate it because it's edgy' makes me sound too much like a hypocrite considering I made a completely unironic dystopian nation because I listened to some vocaloid songs (Velysi) and the fact that I do find interest in some dystopic settings.

Heh, when writing about modern military fiction, I judge things on number crunching and things read on the Alternate History Forum by real obsessive types that put me to shame; hence, why I'm nitpicky when it comes to writing about Axis victories. Power to anybody who wants to, but I'd never do it:

- 1) You basically need magic for a long-term victory, cough Azur Deutschland. That's how realistic it is.
- 2) I hate writing about Nazi Germany...because it's so damn unpredictable to imagine what they'd do after getting Lebensraum following a hypothetical victory some time by 1943...anytime before or after and Barbarossa would do worse than IOTL, as their production capacities and boots on the ground seem to imply. All the possible things are edgy-looking if Nazis remain Nazis.

Finally, I'd like to say that having such a viewpoint may actually be a detriment to my realism sometimes, Catgirls-aside. I've got a terrible way of overlooking the human element of things. This is especially true of my Canon. I find it reasonable that 1939 France could've stopped Germany if given the proper plan and enough time and find such a scenario far more realistic than the Man in High Castle/Wolfenstein/TNO style settings...judging by the numbers and attrition rate. But I painfully overlook political capital and individual leaders' will to fight on: something that doomed France in real life. And in a sense, if one wants to be very very realistic in an MT setting, political willpower is something that can't be overlooked.

Quite the difference in how I handle writing. I'm actually not one for detail at all and tend to overlook number crunching, mainly because computation for the sake of realism makes me snooze. Strange thing is, my nation's timeline isn't even an Axis victory, but an Allied victory, which just makes things all the more awkward when the leader of the free world suddenly goes absolutely batshit Nazi. I somehow think this would be possible with the world's worst dash of luck and bad politics; both Kennedy and segregationist politicians would have to hose up royally for this to happen, the former for angering off the entire South, and the latter for people like Wallace by somehow failing to capitalize on this.

I think I already threw out realism when half of the South ended up underwater though, even far beyond what the worst case scenarios for that would be. That and actually having an esoteric fascist government in power.

Wow I'm surprised this thread hasn't died yet and I'm very impressed!

It's been a while since I posted on F7, but one cliché is low effort posting in AL/AN threads. I'm sure this was talked about before in this thread, but it got tiring for me personally see low effort posts.

Of course if they're new players I completely understand why they make low effort post. They're just starting out and need time to grow.

Wasn't full desertification the first time around. Went something like the following timeline: 2100s- really fucky-wucky climate collapse "averted" with climate engineering on a mass scale. Then in the 2400s the aftershocks fuck over the engineering and shit goes to full-on desertification hell, on the scale of "ice caps are gone and Indochina and central America are uninhabitable now, but at least we managed to make sure our artificial ecosystem survived, so... go team!", then in the 2900s overpopulation crosses even an incredibly inflated carrying capacity and the "human ecosystem" starts to collapse. Yeah, Earth got fucked hard in my work.
