Kyoki Chudoku does have the whole catgirl thing, since most notable characters are female and there's a lot of nekos around. Though I suppose Kyoki Chudoku is somewhat eccentric in that nekofication is basically body horror and a good number of the forcibly nekofied have had the resulting organs amputated where possible.

Well, we took ours from England in a year from now, so... yay for not meeting that one?

For every catgirl that exists, there's another cat with human ears running around. Do you really want that?

1)As a Ouiaboo that insists Plan E could have worked, I say that The Man in High Castle and similar works have monopolized generations of WW2 alt-history into muh jetpack Hitler and his Wunderwaffles. Doubly so if the setting involves nukes for the people that rejected judenphysik and had the genius economic plan of turning Eastern Europe into a farm with +60-100 million clumps of compost. I guess Nazi remnants are cool in their own way because justifying them actually breeds creativity and they're still kind of niche.

2) I forgot which year I began world-building about "catgirls" and I'm not sure if I'm responsible for it, I'm not sure if I'm vain for even thinking so. But I find stories with demi-humans who don't act with self-restraint to be grating.

Hey hey, LP here: Too burnt out with this nation to make new lore or fix macrohistorical longue durée alt-his inconsistencies, too clingy to let it die.

Ultimately we can complain about cliches all we like, but it doesn't matter, since the only thing that determines a concept's merit is how well it is executed, not the originality of the idea. Though being original certainly helps- I'm sure my writing flaws have been somewhat covered by people's willingness to entertain the "cool" new nomad nation.

Kind of us? Well the English did use us as a trading post so...

I don't stand with Ukraine. I don't stand with Russia. I don't stand with the US, NATO, or EU. I stand with the innocent civilians being caught in the crossfire while the politicians, the media, and weapons manufacturers continue to stoke division and conflict in their geopolitical chess games and treat the people of Ukraine as mere pawns. Zelensky is a corrupt, opportunist oligarchic politician who is not fit to lead Ukraine through anything and wants to inflate his own ego and offshore accounts.

I need to throw my two cents in here for a second.
Not that I hate anyone who does this, but it gets a bit tiring to see FT/FFT nations reply to a war-themed thread with 'Oh, we blow them up from orbit' Like, yes, I get it, you have spaceships. Yes, I get that that's the most logical thing, but can you throw out some of your logic to be more entertaining with replies? Just a little bit?

Maybe write something about the ground forces landing on the planet?

Some FFT nations have reality-destroying weapons, so for better or worse, orbital strikes are modest.

It's especially bullshit when you consider that the destructive potential of railguns and such is often overblown. If you're being realistic, and I assume these FT nations try to be, then you need to burn fuel to change your orbit, and that's expensive. And you would only be able to target a tiny percentage of the planet's surface otherwise, unless you're in high orbit, in which case it'll take hours for your shells to land, ample time to move the kilometre or so it takes to exit the lethal blast radius of a railgun strike or prepare assets to intercept it. You'll almost certainly need to land troops unless you're FFT or FFT+.

Honestly, what would the English gain from colonizing WF? Shakespeare fanatics of European origin who don't even want to fight wars? A tiny island? They don't even get ze flammenwerfer until WWII, when they feel it is necessary to have some level of defense/element of surprise should the Pacific front extend all the way to where they are?

I want to have sufficient realism, but that does not mean there won't be moments of...sometimes dark humor and drama.

Honestly I'm gonna have to disagree. There's plenty of well written FFT+ Space Empires out there, but the blandness of their concept makes them all blend together. They can be the best written version of a nation but if I've seen 344 of the exact same thing, I'm still gonna consider it boring. Call of Duty, for what it's worth, is perfectly fine in execution but everyone hates it because it's bland and generic military shooter tripe. On the other hand, I can get past an iffy execution if the concept is neat and not done to death.

I wonder has any fictional nation ever talked about the natives of the continent when the Spanish, British, Dutch, or French Colonist arrived? I feel like if your going to have a fictional continent in the real world and that continent was colonized by the old Empires it would be nice to explain what the natives did. Though I haven't looked hard enough feel free to correct me if I am wrong.

It is true that cliché isn't inherently bad, there are ways to make it work. But it's hard; done without finesse, cliché can drag you out of a work far easier, quicker, and harder than poor writing can. Here's a J.P. Beaubien video to explain it easier than I can. You won't hear exactly the same arguments I'm making, he's a little more favorable to them, but the points he brings up are valid.

Clichés do work. They wouldn't be cliché if they didn't; but now that they are overdone it does kinda take a very skilled writer to pull them off and make them feel right to the reader.

...Hey, wait-

God is with us.

The death of Queen Victoria in 1901 laid the foundation for the United Kingdom of Great Britain, Germany, and Ireland. King William V now rules over the largest country in the world, taking up the former area of the British and German Empires. A world on the brink, the new and fragile nation seeks its place...
