After finding out that kings who only care for themselves are generally bad for the populace and the nation as a whole, a rebellious rogue nation formed to start a civil war to rid themselves of the idea of being a kingdom.

The country was originally a kingdom named after a dragon's hoard. It declined through a series of wars with its neighbor Orshalu, and more authoritarian kings came to power afterwards. A rebellion based on libertarian socialist principles recently took over (it was livestreamed), and they made sure not to destroy civilian infrastructure.

edit: Germany achieved victory in WWII with the military leadership of two magical girls, formerly orphans, who each have a rose growing out of one eye. After neutralizing their immediate threats, they had Germany take a defensive stance. They also distanced themselves from Nazism and socialism and are just nationalists who also like sweets and the Gothic Lolita aesthetic. (note: National Socialism isn't really socialist)

Japanese politics is no longer centre-right/right dominated, but in fact the LDP (or DLP in their universe) actually has good competition from the left and centre parties (with an actual Socialist Party!).

Due to "a specialized mobile device tailored to each tribe that allows Leaders to set the objectives of the day and for the constituents to determine the daily duties of those above them, and to rate each other on the quality of their work along several axes of interaction" that "serves also to keep Tribesmen' apprised of their tribe's supply of favors and favor compared to the rest of the Caleshan tribes", they have created a system where everyone is way too knowledgeable about what everyone else is doing, and everyone's got way too much influence in what everyone else is supposed to be doing. Though, given there's like 30 billion of them, I'm not sure how they reach consensus.

Though all males in Ghesite society are pressed into their version of military service, women can also serve... though it should be noted that they are not forced into the role. I should think this would technically make them more dangerous, as they're actual volunteers...

Thanks for pointing that line out to me, my guy.

It's definitely a misstatement on my part- not all male members of a band are expected to fight in a host. In fact, only the hunters of a band, who are traditionally mostly males, are expected to do so. And "pressed" is definitely a typo, "heavily encouraged by extant societal pressures" would be a better phrase.

Thanks again, that's such a short line I would've never caught that error.

In all seriousness, though, I meant it to be like a Radio London-style affair, with rebellious actions being coordinated in code via the livestream. Might need to go back and fix it if that's not clear lol

One day, a wormhole popped up outta nowhere in the town of Dauphin, Manitoba. From this wormhole spewed impressive numbers of fantastical critters that immediately set about trying to conquer the area. While the locals were pretty sorely ravaged, the organized forces had lots of experience in dealing with douchebags trying to plunder shit, and roflmurdered their way all the way back through the wormhole, whereupon they found Political Treebeard and were like 'huh, on any other day this might seem strange'.

I watched an anime like this...
