first of all, if they're so advanced, why don't they just make their ships smaller like computers? it wastes less resources and they become more agile (which is pretty important in space combat). besides, any advanced civilization wouldn't use organic pilots
second of all, that's just absurd

this is why

Like what Warhammer did. It also need not be some sort of interstellar catastrophe—serious resource shortage, or even just simple tech or scientific barrier can do the trick. For example, I do think that AI advancement IRL will gradually stagnate until somekind of commercially viable breakthrough from either quantum computing or neuroscience happens. Just like how microchip advancement are failing Moore's law due to it reaching the gates of quantum physics. We can introduce scenarios where these necessary breakthroughs can be hampered—after all, civilization do cyclically moves in and out of dark ages. In fact, if we take nature as inspiration, population growth tend to take a logistic curve that flattens out eventually, so there isn't really a law that says "exponential growth (or even growth at all) is guaranteed".

The assumption in my canon is a mix of hard scientific barriers (there's only so much physical law allows you to do, and exploiting the really weird areas of physics has absurdly huge R&D costs that slow progress dramatically), really high-end civs not sticking around since they either blow themselves up or exit into tailor-made artificial universes, and most civilizations becoming interstellar within a few thousand years of each other due to simultaneous uplifts by now-vanished precursors a few hundred thousand years ago.

So, the way I handled technology is that before humans went to space, most lifeforms were wiped out by a swarm of self-replicating killer robots made from nanomachines. The space-faring civilizations that did survive entered a period of stagnation. The "modern" space-faring nations got most of their technology from remnants of the previous civilizations, and technological progress is now kinda slowing down, because they basically salvaged everything they could from the dead aliens.

I think the worst part of those types of sigs is how they are technically legal since they fit within the 8 line limit so you can't report them because 'having an ugly sig' isn't against the rules.

No seriously, the forum I was most active on before NS just straight up did not have sigs enabled so I just carried that over to here by never bothering with making one.

Going out and forcing players into specific levels of technological advancement and flavor really only encourages the death of creativity. Very sad to watch this happen! It's really just a matter of finding people who aren't total asshats to interact with, and then working with them.

Hyper-commodified cocaine capitalism. Urbanized solar systems. Omnixenophobia. War economy without end. Radical body augmentation for fun and profit.

I make exactly two exceptions from a fairly strict adherence to realism, and hate them both.

So Iron Sky and Iron Sky: The Coming Race and all those wack conspiracy theories about Nazis setting up a colony on the Moon is what Mondbasis Achtzig revolves around. Also Wolfenstein. Edgy Nazi Space people with completely ridiculous explanation about how they came to power on the moon and stuff. At this point I have ideas that I have no idea how to execute it.

defeat can also be used to do things like usher in an era of reform in order to learn from a national mistake; imprint things upon the national consciousness; remove complacency from the military, etc.

in many ways you can make a much more compelling story via defeat than via victory, which is what matters tbqh
