Oh yeah, I know that feeling.

I've even tried to change myself because I was guilty of doing this too, but the lack of change from some people really made me cynical. That's why I really appreciate the friends I've made here. Sanghyeok has helped me flesh out the Twins more. Kiu Ghesik too.

Pretty sure they're both dead; I remember the AN tourist thread making a comeback a while ago but it died after a few pages as far as I remember. I've had half a mind to make a new one but my nation kinda just eats people who somehow find their way into its borders so that wouldn't really work. Maybe someone else can revive it for me while I get around to writing something that's more amenable to the thread theme.

Yeah, definitely. I think this is mostly a problem with nations that have a few very obvious distinctive features that stand out a lot - Hamatu's mermaids, KG's nomadic horse archers, LP's cat people, and your and Feyrisshire's anime-aesthetic socialism are a few examples of stuff that tend to catch people's attentions only for them to just stay on that one feature and think they know what the nation is about. After all, if they stay fixated on that one thing, they get to avoid the cardinal sin of making nondescript, generic forum posts without actually having to read anything. It's the perfect cop-out.

Someone once described my nation as "Imperial Japan", and I'm not how they came to that conclusion given my nation's pretitle is "United Socialist Federation".

I agree, Feyrisshire and LP have been defined by their catpeople despite having very rich culture and history (both of them have outstanding factbooks in those subjects), Baizou is often dismissed as "another Japan", Velvet's Realm and Neo's Realm are known only for their use of italics, etc. I like Giant Space Wrym and other "can't judge by the cover nations" for this very reason though. It's really obvious who is reading factbooks and who hasn't.

Hey man, even being wholesome will do you in now and then. I get really weird responses that actually makes me take aback with a "... Wat?" 🤔

Mind you, it's not because it's an one-liner: I can definitely take those if they are relevant to my character. Other times, it's just so genre blind, or "Failed a spot check" like yessss, Clarissa is a happy robot! Didn't you notice that?

Here's a good one (mostly because I like having this thread around and don't want it to die) - perfectly morally upstanding characters and nations, usually either liberal democracies or liberal-leaning communist states and their corresponding leader figures who tend to have very little characterisation or goals beyond advancing some "good" ideological agenda in a flawlessly clean manner. I know ideological self-inserts and the like have already been talked about to death in this thread, but what I honestly find the most annoying is that they never have any moral nuance and always have this holier-than-thou attitude in interactions with characters who do. Their politicians do everything nicely and cleanly and have this unshaking devotion and integrity towards The People and go on to chastise everyone who isn't as immaculate as them like some kind of idealistic moral preacher. Every time I see a communist character on the forums going on about staying perfectly true to the cause of The Noble Worker it awakens McCarthyist urges in me that I never thought I had.

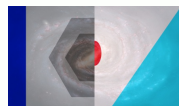

Of course, that isn't to say that the preacher bit in leader interactions is always boring, but personally I only find it tolerable when it's self-aware. S/o to Guyanese Commune for doing the prime example of that with their Jim Jones leader posts.

i used to have that problem, and still kinda do. i really just need practice writing characters, which was why i started on that f7 fanfic that is terribly overdue and i still have yet to finish the final few chapters of. i might need to end up creating a nation with an inanimate leader if i can't get any better.

Something that I've noticed is that the perception of what's "wank" and what isn't in regards to military stuff seems to be decidedly skewed. I don't know why, but it feels like if you have the audacity to make any sort of FT military that's competently designed and successful within its own lore and it'll pretty immediately get accused of being wank as soon as you step into an F7 military thread (though again those are hellholes in their own right), whereas lower-T nations hardly ever face similar accusations unless they're "generic MT republic with a stronger military". I don't know if it has to do with stereotyping or something but it certainly feels like there's a bit of a double standard at play.

I do fully agree, though. Hating on FT nations for being "wank" has been in vogue for a while now - not that the stereotype isn't there for a reason, but people are still way too eager to paint over all of FT with the same brush. I feel like some of them might be doing it for smug self-reassurance, e.g. "I don't have star-destroying guns, therefore my nation isn't wank and is in fact nuanced and deep".

As a fully MT nation I would honestly say MT and PMT are the worst tech levels for wank on NS right now. But II is completely overrun with horrendous one liner war RPs as a whole anyway, the fact that it's all MT and PMT nations who read Tom Clancy for the first time a week ago or play too many arcade shooters doing it is merely a coincidence.

I mean, that is a pretty common term in fanfic and writing circles on the internet. ERP = Erotic RP.
