I don't think FT has any rules. Apparently they're slinging universes at each other or something now, idfk.

Just use Giant Robots smh.

IMO Weapons of Mass Destruction like nukes, god rods or other megabombs are really boring from a writing perspective. Maybe once if you want to write a more horror oriented piece, but anything more than that is just overstaying their welcome. Especially if they get used like firecrackers by some users.

Giant Robots are far cooler. Screw you Square Cube Law! Have two mechas fight each other uno en uno!

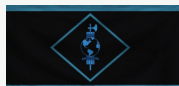

Or have colossal eldritch creatures do the destruction, that stuff's FUN!

If you want to write horror stuff, do bioweapons. The mass hysteria caused by COVID-19 shows how even relatively benign diseases (when compared to outright tailor-made diseases, like a hypothetical airborne ebola) terrify the shit out of people.

Just bring it to its logical conclusion - a Pacific Rim style battle with hundreds of Mechs and giant monsters duking it out in the middle of future Tokyo

I've got a "zombie" virus that burns itself out for assassinations, a rather interesting idea.

FAR SUPERIOR of course to the RATHER DUMB IDEA of a weaponized zombie virus that spreads out of control like some crappy, campy zombie flick. You know, the generic night of the living dead clone no. 15784651

Granted because it is such a precise weapon, spreading it around offers to further fear through chaos and human nature. You don't know where it came from or how or why, but now the media is in a frenzy while cops are trying to handle the situation.

Eventually it feeds into a small loop that raises hell with enough victims and inconsistent timings of attacks.

I used to have zombies in GWO history with the addendum that they're actually capable of being more intelligent than humans, just incapable of creativity; they learn, but don't do anything new, which means they eventually learn how to use firearms, math, and machinery through observation, but aren't sentient. The idea of "shambling cripples that eat people while leaving parts of themselves in random places" never really struck me as particularly spooky.

Totally see that one more often than I want... even for things I like it gets annoying. Hence why my nation is as it is, it's just more fun to RP morally grey nations... but it'll become edgy later on, that I know.

Hey now, the communists are only disliked because they lost in the GWO. They actually had a larger population at the start of the GWO Civil War ;o

Is it so hard to come into a thread with at least something about your nation? Like if you have no facebook or even a basic sig, how do you expect people to make decent replies?

Also on the topic of America wanks, generally any real country political LARPs are god-awful. America, Germany, Japan, the UK, all extremely boring and done to death. Or althistory nations that only change like 3-5 things from real life then act like they're super original even though the biggest change was the political party ruling a nation and Africa is 3 countries (and is about as deep lore-wise as a puddle because no one ever gives Africa any attention)

Kinda depends on who the FT player is and the setting, sometimes some FT players would just drop asteroids on planets if something really really bad was to happen ie zombie plague, losing a major colony, or for dramatic effect. While not all that common it can happen from time to time. If I recall, I think FT grade fusion and anti matter weapons are more common when it comes to that stuff. The one that a number of FT players don't like (but still dependent on the setting and players) is Intersystem Ballistic Missiles, basically a super missile with an FTL drive, you can already see where that is going.

The nation I use still use nukes, but mostly resorts to space oil not!mustard gas if it's going to use WMDs. Since it does a more dieselpunk in space sort of vibe with excess amounts of trenches. So yea, just depends.

not a massive RP'er but i think that the best solution is to have different "tiers" of FT so you don't have a stellaris-esque space empire fighting a fucking living weapon of mass destruction something like "Traditional FT" for stellaris-like empires, "Greater FT" for galactic empires, and "Post-FT" for throwing universes at people

This is technically a thing in "FT" vs "FFT", FT being what you traditionally think for FT empires (Star Wars, Star Trek, Hard Sci-Fi, etc) whilst FFT is a usually post-singularity civilization where, if it existed IRL, technological growth is so great that most MT people would not be able to understand it in the slightest. There are a few proposed tech levels beyond that, but at that level, the line between mortal and God becomes blurred - either that or their whole society would be so different that not even the author would be able to comprehend it.

The way I sound it makes it sound like 'post-fft' nations are memetic hazards though, lmao.
