"Oh! An Irishman! I have plenty of Irish ancestry, though I do have Southern, Welsh, Scottish, French, and a whole slew of different European groups in my ancestry. And, his heritage is just as mixed apparently.

So yeah, his politics are actually roughly agreeable. I wholeheartedly support the socialist revolution in Ireland, especially the methods through labor unions and such. Honestly, it reminds me of the Occidental Revolutions in Europe, Ireland specifically. Though, I do think there should be a place for unions post-revolution, with syndicates representing both cooperatives and unions. I also think there should be a separation of powers between geographic and vocational constituencies.

Another criticism I have of the government is the Chairman being an ad hoc executive. I think the position is ripe for an abuse of power at worst and easy to become something like the Prime Minister at worst. That and the need for delegates in an age that has the Internet is questionable. I guess they could be around in case of emergencies such as a pandemic where traditional citizen assemblies can't assemble, but having the votes of many local assemblies tallied is honestly a better system. Delegates, when given power, can easily become plain-old representatives.

The lack of checks and balances in general make the Irish system of Connors vulnerable to the concentration of power, though the lack of a political party dominating the process does help in that respect. Oh and the Democratic Party in the RCAS is not like the Bolshevik party. It is a lot more loosely organized with a larger member base. I wouldn't even call it a traditional political party, since it doesn't control legislation due to the lack of a parliament. If there was a representative body in the RCAS that the Democratic Party could've dominated, then I would worry about the party becoming too powerful. Though, I guess it would've eventually split if it were like that. In essence, the Democrats post-Risorgimento is less of a cohesive party with whips and more of a vestigial organization. Politics in the RCAS tends to be rather non-partisan outside of the executive branch, since issues are voted on directly by citizens.

Sectional and economic interests predominate within the political system.

Allowing for wage labor without any restrictions is a dangerous prospect. 'Cultural distrust' would do little to protect workers, especially if the world situation is not in favor of Ireland. Apprenticeships and exemptions for small/family businesses can be done to fill in the holes that wage labor had traditionally fulfilled before capitalism's rise.

I do admire his opposition to theocracy, and his liberal interpretation of Catholicism effectively makes Christianity less of an issue. Though, I do think local governments should have more discretion in what laws they can make when it comes to 'crimes'. That and drugs have historically caused huge problems in America. Now, criminalizing the use isn't the answer. The answer instead should be rehabilitating drug users and cracking down on the dealers. That and regulating the pharmaceutical industry. This may go against Connors' laissez-faire approach, but I think any market needs to be regulated to some extent.

As for the man himself, his life story is honestly weird. It's based entirely on his politics and implementing said politics into the country. It's boring frankly. And- HOLY CRAP, he got into power at 34 years old?! What the actual fuck?! I spent almost a hundred years to start a truly socialist revolution in America and this fucker does it magically in a decade or two. I call bullshit! This is an outrage! And, how did the globalist capitalists NOT invade his country to restore the ancien regime? I have so many questions!"

No, it is not the Confederate States of America. No, it's not the South either. SU stands for 'States and Unions'. The right acronym is RCAS. Please read the Factbook.

"I spoke with the council and faction leaders, and can say, that half of them are not even satisfied with him. Chainbreakers leader is a black dude, so "Racist little runt" was the most polite name he gave lil' Pickett. Spymaster Blackbird thinks, that with his sizes, he has a potential of being a superior spy and assassin, who can use his low profile to hide in small crevices, and impersonate a lost child or someone's son. She wishes she was that size.

Stan Dixon was sleepin' after getting drunk on his newest experimental moonshine, and Casey James belives, that while hard drugs pose danger, soft ones are not that bad, so this is rather zigzagged thingy for him. And John Walker AI finds his life in simulation rather interesting, while minorly criticizing the approach on pharma industry. And spokesperson of Federacion Anarquista Enthorea belives, that his syndicalism is flawed until they get over the racism altogether.

I believe, that he has some merit, but I also got lots of things to criticize and roast, and this would be a long story. And the short story, is that his heart is somewhat in the right place, but he is a lil' bit misguided. A version, that he is racist because of possible colored bullies was debunked, and so the reasons for this attitude are unknown to us for now. What's really bizarre is that you're such a straightforward statesman. I wouldn't imagine bluntness to be a virtue in a line of business where deception and indirectness are expected and not avoided, then again, most stuffy politicians I know don't use elephants or rams to convey their power, especially not the Americans. Then again you Sherechians do seem like straightforward people crawling out of a straightforward war. So...I guess that's fitting, or expected: a military strong-man. Still, I'm not sure what axes do in this day and age, but that's just me being nitpicky. If you really are following that Daishan guys ideology through, I suppose it's necessary for what you conceptualize as self-defense. I do wonder how your little night watchman State will fare though, when foreigners want in on business regardless of your claim to self-sufficiency."

"Hate to treat you like a zoo animal, but you are one fascinating woman. I have heard of Roswell before... but to think it was not only real - but a human whose ancestry is from another dimension? Why, that just boggles the mind of this technologically primitive man. I mean...wow. The flying machines alone make my mind wander. But enough about me being confuzzled at the technological differences. I am sure you get that way too much, even today. Actually, bout that, I know it's not my fault you got wrecked and interrogated for years, but uh, on the behest of Earth... sorry. But hey, at least you or your kin didn't decide to bomb your variant of Earth. I don't really know how that works with multiverses and all, but I do believe I can still appreciate the gesture. But I am sure you don't wanna dwell on those times too much, I wouldn't want to either.

Personally, I am glad to see an alien that doesn't treat 'primitives' like target practice or slaves. I guess we are technically the same species, but y'all are kinda scary. What with the whole deadly plagues, destruction of cities, and uh whole manner of other things. In fact, I get why you feel such a way. While your Earth is still human, it is still at least a couple of centuries before your technological level. Call it xeno man's burden, but at least you want humans to develop somewhat naturally rather than... forcefully. I still have nightmares about those damn sapient tripods.

You seem like a good person too. You ain't some douchebag that spends their days murdering children or lazing around in their harem like 90% of the figures I come across. You're an intelligent person with a heart in the right place. Those are things I wanna see in most people, let alone someone whose job is making sure the US Government and your people remain in a cordial-ish relationship. You're a bit aloof and snarky, sure, but who wouldn't be after all of that? Sure, you also view Earth a lot... differently than I would like. But, I am sure that there is a civilization out there that even I would look down upon in technological and societal development. It's all about perspective, I do suppose. I like you, pardner - if you'll excuse the colloquialism."

It's just as possible for the other side to have some good ideas. Do we cease all industrial development just because the Holy Empire of Aquilaurum also prioritises the industry? No, that would be stupid and impractical! President Montemaggiore is essentially shaping his own ideology, taking important talking points and good ideas from everywhere... and that's great. I appreciate a leader who cares about the good of their country more than about sticking with a particular school of thought.

To lose one's species, and one's entire civilization for that matter, is a special kind of agony that even I doubt I would be able to live with. If one placed themselves in the shoes of a military commander who not only went through that but found herself pitted against an overwhelming amount of individuals and threats that were fully capable of destroying her if given the chance and which possessed the hair-trigger foolhardiness to attempt as such, it would be quite hard indeed to keep one's patience. "American neocolonialism? That is rich coming from the mouth of a British royal. It was the British who still kept their tendrils on their former colonies through the Commonwealth of Nations. Less a commonwealth but more like an association of thralls. The British maintain their cultural hegemony through the language that we speak, it subtly shapes our perception of the world through the meaning behind the words, and the monarchy has cemented itself as the moral foundation of Britain to the point that any move against the monarchy itself is unthinkable."

"I also noticed that you tried to get my dear friend, Castro, to democratize. It's a foolish endeavor, a king should stay at their own lane and never meddle in the affairs of revolutionaries such as the likes of me, Nasser, and Castro!"

The Avant-Gardist State of Patagonia ~~~ Gauchos and Mapuches, orgies and parties, avant-garde art, futurism, syndicalism, the New Man, general strikes, the glorification of violence, spiritual nationalism, esoteric occultism, CIA spooks, Spartanian homosexuality, public sodomy, and more

Triomphe du Surréalisme (1968)

- There are many things said about Patagonia but few actually know what goes on behind the Andes mountains. Tales of human depravation and man's inner darkest self run wild. A place where avant-garde culture flourish and the artist don't fear the censor. Where all live bold and free under the gaze of the Patron. Yet all dreams will come to an end soon...

"Ya' think, Patagonia is surreal mess under Konrad? Yep, it is. There are all sorts and manners of factions, and they are not like our's, which are united under one cause of fight for freedom and equality for all. These are very nasty lot, most of them are from far left and right, willing to commit heinous crimes for either their cause or own gain. And only Patron dude Konrad, who is mad as a March hare, can somehow hold them all under one reign. His mind is messy and surreal and gods only know, what the heck is going on there, but somehow, he is the force of order in Patagonia, the only thing, that holds it together.

Once he kicks the bucket though... Things become truly surreal. Factions will start a drawn and hellish war and gods know, how this all ends. Given the possible threat of Nazi resurrection, we will prepare to intervene, crush the fascists, slaves and other scum, and unite Patagonia under the blue and black banner as soon as Le Patron is no more. But until then, we will wait and observe. So basically, Konrad not only holds factions, but also our horde. He is persuasive..."-Shawn Bjornson

Turbina Vortis

Inogo Estima... An interesting, unconventional leader for an interesting, unconventional nation. He seems very open and direct, not at all reserved. In this way, he reminds me of Metron.

I surprise myself by saying this, but I personally do not see any problem with his religion. He has some strong reasons for his belief. After all, he was gifted supernatural abilities, and those have worked multiple times. Plus, Sherechian faith, from the data I have, seems at least slightly more tolerable than many other religions.

I have, many times, commented on the ways of his people as pure chaos, but after thinking about it for a long time, Wild Science can be rather chaotic just as well. Wild Science is basically chaos with a purpose. It's just that we use chaos as a tool, a mean to an end, while Sherechians just like chaos as it is. That's no reason to dislike one another.

So, yes. At first glance it would seem like I would dislike this direct and informal, sometimes even rude, leader from a rather wild nation who is a firm believer in his people's religion... but I have to say, I like this man. I have no problem with him, and in several strange ways, our people can be rather similar. Fellow two "oddballs" on the global stage.

What this thing is:

A nation obsessed with technology and progress populated by various types of mad and villainous scientists. They're not evil, of course, it's just the aesthetics of it. Well, some of them aren't scientists either - those less academically talented generally find their calling assisting their ~~master~~ employer with their scientific endeavours (hump or other physical deformity not mandatory).

"This- Archbrain- Turbina Vortis- well, she is a dictator. I don't like dictators, but I suppose, for a dictator, Archbrain Vortis is not the worst, and her compatriot, Metron Vektorin, seems to be more humorous than harmful, so- I really don't want to say it, but I am going to anyways- how-bad-could-they-both-possibly-be?" -President Lyra Elmspirit, feeling rather curious.
