"The irony of consumption of the sacred flesh as being indicative of divinity is ironic. Besides that point, Náhköl VI and his reign shows the extent of self-degeneration and erasure of human identity that persists within the depths of the mind. His efforts for expansionism is... interesting? A narrowmindedness to an objective of such nature will only lead to self-destruction, but I think that's par for the course."

Well, I didn't know gays making babies were possible for one. But oh well. On to him. Well, for starters, him inheriting the 'positive' traits of his parents is a joke. He is little more than an edgy Mary Sue who happens to live in the middle of bumfuck nowhere. God, how can bootleg Tarzan over here be so boring? Seriously, this guy has so much missing potential. We could have had some interesting story of a man slowly trying to adapt to the world he lives in and going slowly mad from the lack of human contact, but no. Instead, we have some genetically modified superhuman who's perfect in every way and now hunts... giant scorpions. I'm not even mad at this guy, nor sad at the edgy backstory, I'm just... bored. Maybe Susan over here just needs to give me more information on this man, but until then, my opinion on him is just an overwhelming 'sigh and meh'.

Leader of Council and President of the United States,
Jim Carver

Like the old one, but more authoritarian and dystopian.
No, this isn't 1984. If you want 1984, go to FAN of Khoronzo
