Leskya was established after a fuckton of conflicts under the katastrophestaat system after unrest in the 21st and 22nd century, and they began to resurface in the 23rd century, not only that, but some time later, Aliens came to visit Leskya and gave it...cool stuff, I guess, and so here they are now.

My super short factbook just about sums it up really.

The Pan-Asiatic States military is made up of today's People's Liberation Army as well as virtually every other modern military force in Asia.

Which makes me quiver imagining what they'd be capable of.

Pulsroth is an authoritarian democracy, which has preserved its traditions well. They also have Meritocracy, which reminds one of Ming China.

Their leading party is the Folkwealders' Socialistish Party of Gilan which doesn't seem to have an absolute majority with 48 seats. That's assuming their government works similar to some western democracies.

It is a militaristic and generally authoritarian intergalactic empire that, while definitely not above genocide, repression, and other heinous acts, still appears to be marginally more "liberal" (esp. considering recent reforms) than what you'd expect a typical hyper-militaristic space empire to be.

They somehow managed to launch the first person into space, rather than the Soviets, which is quite surprising, assuming they followed the broad outlines of the space race.

Also, Sweden is named "Sueden".

Ninja'd: Our good Admiral, in the earliest days of his naval career, was shipwrecked on Socotra. He only made it out alive when the rest of his crew recreated the Murphy expedition as he was out looking for food away from the camp when the rest of them murdered each other in a starved fit of violence. He was picked up by a passing ship and taken to Yemen, where he became something of a celebrity after organizing a defense of the palace against a coup looking to depose the Sultan (and was then banished after getting up to some good old Bond-style fun), an action which would end up catapulting him into fame back in France and lead to him taking the command track.

Damn, this dude's life is far more exciting than mine.

The Gheshite 'army' use their compound bows mostly to save time of having to slice and dice a person, but they will still use their swords and knives instead of bows sometimes.

The Peace treaty that ended the Second Cartaghean War partitioned North Africa between the victorious powers. This is likely to lead to a resurgence of jingoism and Islamic integristism in the region.

The Revolutionary Committee holds de facto executive power as a shadow council that arbitrates Mob rule and chooses the next R.V. It is composed of mainly warlords and mob leaders who demonstrated extraordinary political cunning.

Very based.
