"He doesn't seem to want to invade us, probably cause he knows what's good for him, but due to vast cultural, religious and ideological differences, it's highly unlikely, that we will ever get along. Because his country is a christian theocracy, and in the past, we suffered from a christian theocratic regime. Historical scars are deep and they still resonate within us. We have already forgave christians ever since our revolt succeeded, and hold little to no grudge to them, hell, i'll even soon announce an official statement, that since Vicarius Dei Edgar and his elites have violated all Biblical commandments and they were heretics, christians are not guilty for our suffering!

But that doesn't mean, we are becoming best pals with James V anytime soon."-Shawn Bjornson

"Firstly, I was quite surprised to find a contrasting approach to modernism from James himself as one of his quotes seemed to have objected modernism in a radical sense. Certainly, while the expansionist part is a bit off-putting, he has a remarkable sense of duty however in so-called uplifting the impoverished people from their former state with his various reforms and such. That is a wonderful thing to do for someone who genuinely took notice of their own people's welfare"

"Ah Shawn, simply put, I have much to say and admire about his well-built physique, strength and other similar features. Though regrettably, his hedonistic lifestyle, somewhat excessive brutality and lack of experience could prove to be a major downside for a man who seemingly promised a good future for his people. It is a thrill to see where this nation of his goes"

"We would normally praise a leader such as Alica, but her actions on Kua prove that she may be one of the most horrendous leaders we've seen. From ignoring the requests of her overworked people, to the absolutely abhorrent enslavement and boiling of them. A leader is to stop rebellions before they happen and even if they should rebel, the response shouldn't be a boiling of the entire population. We care for our Octavian people and the thought of gassing a planet for something so minor sickens us. We will discipline them if necessary, but never that unless necessary. Our opinion is entirely negative. Alice's incompetence is shown and we hope that she contracts the worst disease in the galaxy and dies very slowly from it as a more competent leader takes over. Frankly assimilation would solve this issue, but that is aside the point."

He seems likable enough, though, no doubt he could get control by himself if he had wished. Also, why do you have to be all "Imperial". You want to look like the bad guys? You have to stay defensive, until somebody attacks you, then you beat the hell out of them, and nobody can say you were in the wrong. You add imperial to your nation and you start getting yourself deeper than you can dig yourself out.

"I very rarely don't hate theocrats, and I mean it. Almost always, theocrats are the types of leaders I despise the most... I don't think I need to make reasons as to why I almost always hate them. However, I think I'm going to... say Mr. Cunningham is an exception to this belief of mine. When you're in a world where dictatorships and other horrific regimes rule, and you want to change your system closer to the democracies before the "Catadysm", and want to implement other programs to help the common person, it's safe to say I think you're a good leader... moreover, I know his standards of 'liberal' are defined by a corrupt, theocratic regime that has been there for way longer than he has existed, but nonetheless, such progress is commendable, as the conditions of Cunningham's world are way harsher than our world. In conclusion, I believe the Archbishop is in a good place and deserves to be somehow commended. I wish him the best.

"Those of Valentine are quite interesting, one one hand their personality is one to give off a friendly face. Infectious friendship. But if your dull enough to try and fight them they now hold quite the arsenal to combat any that stand in their way.

Not to mention their hight Val reminds me of a creature I spent climbing for a week. I hate the feeling of being looked down upon, both figuratively and physically... but his happiness it reaches out and counters these feelings so much so that I don't mind it.

Gwen has proven to be dangerous in her possibly alternate past. I believe we both lie in a standoff.

And Clarissa, I've heard many fine things about you, all Low, Death, And Oni think you are a great friend, looking after those around you and those that are friends I look forward to our future interactions as I believe you, like the rest, are very interesting. Just like the rest of the people that reside in the distant lands"-The first king

Hróðvitnir's Mood: Unfriendly Furry

"So the war he started just ended like that? A  stalemate, and he's gonna go ahead and move on by reconstructing his home like those long years of war between one POS and he himself wasn't a big deal? For a 'king of corpses' he makes Odin look like a wise and not-so-paranoid old man."
