I fucking hate card farming puppets. It's so fucking crap when I decide to actually open some packs and I get like fifteen goddamn 'Nationland Card Farmer [number]' cards.

I based mine off my characters (thank goodness I stopped at 60), and some racing car aesthetics.

I let a good chunk of them CTE before, it was painful to reupload their flags.

How about that one nation where all their puppets have the exact same motto in Korean and I think every single one of their puppets is named after a real world place?

Would explain why some of the names are locked. The stranger than that is how some of these nations appear to be before card farming is a craze. It's just puppets after puppets with the same motto, flag (not the default flag but it could be the same one across all, or RL flags), etc.

Queen's State comes into mind. Now some of you will understand why you can't break the mold for gold badges as an anarchy. Or even when you have 100 for Civil-Economic-Political Rights

Yeah, it's a huge reason why the staff always say 'no' to requests like 'PLEASE JUST RELEASE ALL NATION NAMES THAT HAVEN'T BEEN HERE IN LIKE 15 YEARS, THEY'RE NOT COMING BACK' because the chances are that many of the coveted RL location names that would release for reuse will just ended up grabbed by people who do nothing with them.

Yup. And then the names would again be wasted. Makes logical sense.

Which is worse?

Nations that are just ordinary modern neoliberal nations where their signature says 'This nation DOES represent my RL views!'

Nations that are brutal dictatorships where their signature says 'This nation DOES represent my RL views!'

I mean that's the fundamental issue with the "neoliberal/neoconservative america expy/american ally" nations -- at the end of the day a lot of people here are normal centre-left or centre-right liberals, and when these people make "nations that represent their practical views" you end up with what is - quite a lot of the time - copy-and-paste nonsense. Like obviously this isn't the case in every instance but regardless it does mean that progressive neolib democracy no. 32423423 is a little bit tiring to read through and eventually I just give up and go back to looking at some wacky lorebuilding shit I've missed out on.

NS is something where you can create whatever nation you want. It can be oppressive (I generally write these societies because demagoguery is something I find interesting from a narrative standpoint), it can be democratic, it can be rich, it can be poor. But when you stray into "stable democratic republic/constitutional monarchy" things become a bit ugh and boring. At the very least add in underlying social upheaval or geopolitical issues which need to be overcome. A lot of people just want to make nations in accordance to their views, and because it is their views, they write it as a fully-functioning and prosperous society. A limp Mary Sue caricature of whatever political stance they happen to have taken.

Sometimes this isn't the case. Sometimes people make nations in accordance to their views and do it well. But a lot more don't, and it becomes a massive undifferentiated blob of the same clichés and tropes.

Really a lot of what people don't realise is that you can nullify political participation and have a restrictive police state without people rebelling against the state for the fundamental reason that if people are well-fed, prosperous and have something to lose from rising up, they probably won't be as likely to. A lot of people like to just make their nations corrupt hellscape that don't fall to popular unrest "because reasons"; personally, I like intricately detailing the relations of power, propaganda, and terror which go into maintaining that sort of country.
